THE "LOST PARADISE."

THE STRIKE SCENE.

"The Lost Paradise" will be played this evening by the Frawley Company. There are many thrilling situations and highly sensational climaxes in the excellent presentation, the strongest scene being in the second act where a factory is shown in full operation, with great elaborateness of detail, where the workingmen go out "on a strike." The issue of course, is between labor and capital, and is harmonized with a love story which is absorbingly interesting. The side incidents of the play are numerous and well wrought. The interest never fails in any situation from beginning to end. The bit of realism exhibiting the machinery in motion is startlingly effective.

HE IS A HONOLULU BOY

CHINESE BUT A LEADER FEARED BY A GREAT GOVERNMENT.

Sun Yat Sen's Work and Adventures—Kidnapped in London—His Mission—A Student at Iolani College.

The account of the kidnapping of the Chinaman Sun Yat Sen, by the Chinese Legation in London on October 17 last and subsequently his release several days afterward, brought about by the intervention of British authorities, will be read with a great deal of interest by residents of Hawaii when it is known that this same individual, who, by his persistent plotting against the Manchu Dynasty of his native country, is causing a big sensation all throughout the world, is no other than the same Sun Yat Sen who was reared in this city from the time that he was two years of age until a young man.

At present he has an elder brother residing in the Kula farming district on Maui. Sun and his brother were brought to Honolulu by relatives when Sun was in his second year. He spent his boyhood life in this city attending the public schools until he was old enough to enter Iolani college, where he remained for six years.

Something over eight years ago Sun left Honolulu for Hongkong, where he took up the study of medicine. He qualified after four years' study and started practice in Macao, a Portuguese settlement, some thirty miles from Hongkong. He was a brilliant student, and encouraged by his success in Macao, he was induced by his friends to go to Canton.

It was while practicing in Canton that Sun got into trouble with the Chinese Government. This was but two years ago. The Chinese Government regarded Sun as a treasonable agitator who had plotted against the Manchu Dynasty. He had conspired to seize the Viceroy of the Canton province. He had a number of associates in his scheme. Some of his fellow conspirators were captured, but Sun escaped from the country. He did not give up his treasonable ideas, as the Chinese Government choose to call them, and he is today laboring industriously for the success of his gigantic undertaking. At the time of his detention by the Chinese Legation in London, Sun was strongly suspected by the Chinese officials of negotiating for the purchase of arms for the use of rebellious Chinamen.

Both last year and this year, Sun Yat Sen visited Hawaii as a member of the highest council of the Revolutionary Society of China, which proposes to oust the Manchu Dynasty, overthrow monarchy and set up a Republic. His mission was known here in Honolulu to the prominent Chinese and to many white men. Among the latter was an attaché of The Star, to whom Sun explained the plans chosen by himself and associates to supplant the Chinese monarchy.

Sun Yat Sen stated that the revolution had been fomented in a number of the provinces of China and that it was rapidly being promoted in other provinces. When the opportune time arrived, those in sympathy with such a movement would rise up and make a determined fight against the monarchy. Asked when he thought that time would be and Sun replied sometime during the latter part of 1897. The young man was familiar with every form of government existing in the world today. While in Honolulu he gave out the statement that the plans of his new government for China were formed on the lines of Hawaii's government. "Yes," said he, "we prefer a government similar to the one adopted by this Republic. The manifestation of the revolutionists will give the great common people of China more consideration than ever dreamed of by them. One of the reasons that the movement is so popular throughout China and the prejudice so intense against the Manchu Dynasty is because the members are usurpers. They are northern men and barbarians. There are a great many other advantages to be obtained under a free government and the Chinamen are rapidly awakening to this fact."

While here Sun Yat Sen was very confident of success. He was given notably moral but financial encouragement by prominent Chinese throughout Hawaii, for Sun visited each of the islands. He took his departure from Honolulu about four months ago going direct to America. He visited the larger cities throughout the United States laying his plans before his countrymen. The financial assistance that he received in the States frightened the Chinese Minister in that country and he immediately communicated the facts to his superiors in China. Instructions were received from Peking that Sun must be captured and returned to China as quickly as possible.

This word came too late for the American Chinese Minister to do anything, as Sun had sailed for London on the Majestic. This fact was communicated to the Chinese Legation at London by cable.

Sun was kidnapped a few days after his arrival in London by two Chinamen. He was confined in a room in the Chinese Legation and the plan was to gag him and smuggle him back to China, where he would doubtless lose his head for conspiring against the Government.

The timely interference of an intimate friend of Sun's, named James Cantlie, a prominent resident of London, frustrated the plans of the Chinese Minister in London. Cantlie laid the matter before the Foreign Office of his country and after some diplomatic negotiations, in which the Chinese Legation insisted that Sun was a subject of China and that he was in China so to speak when he was confined in the Chinese Legation, Sun was set free.

Mr. Cantlie in his statement to the Foreign office and the Scotland Yard says that he met Sun in Honolulu on his way home to England from China in March of the present year. Sun had informed him of his plans while here.

Sun Yat Sen will doubtless continue on his mission, now that he has his liberty. It is his intention to visit the various capitals of Europe. After having done this he will leave for China, where he intends to be during the uprising of his people in 1897, if he is not beheaded before that time.

Sun Yat Sen is a man almost of diminutive stature and of sallow complexion. He dresses in the European fashion, and the ordinary observer would be inclined to pass him for a Japanese rather than a Chinaman. He speaks English excellently. While in Hawaii he appeared to be well and in good spirits.

AN ACCIDENT TO A BOY

HEAVY TRUCK PASSES OVER THE BODY OF A LITTLE FELLOW.

Six-Year-Old Son of Wm. Larsen—Attended by Two Physicians—Condition Now Quite Encouraging.

A distressing accident occurred shortly after 5 o'clock last evening, in which Johnnie, the six-year-old son of William Larsen, of the Union Express Company, was quite seriously hurt.

It happened in the yard of the Western stables. One of Mr. Larsen's men was driving a team attached to a heavy truck and was heading for the rear end of the yards when Johnnie attempted to climb up on the side of the big wagon. He missed his hold and without the slightest warning to the driver, fell to the ground directly under the rear wheels, which passed over his body.

The lad was picked up immediately, placed in a carriage and taken to the Larsen home on School street. Dr. Howard was called and later the family physician, Dr. Miner, was found. An examination showed that the boy was badly injured. The heavy wheel had run over the abdomen causing intense pain to the unfortunate lad.

Last night it looked doubtful whether the boy had more than a fighting chance to survive, but this morning the doctors entertained hopes for his complete recovery. This happy condition of things is due to Johnnie's strong constitution. The doctors believe that he will not only recover but will not be maimed in any way.

The truck that passed over his body weighed nearly 2500 pounds.
