TERRORS OF LION HUNTING

FEROCITY OF THE KING OF BEASTS.

A Night Adventure of Gerard the Famous Lion Killer—Experiences He Cares Not to Repeat.

Every hunter of ferocious wild beasts knows what Job meant when he exclaimed, 'I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.' Gerard, the famous lion-killer, was one dark night, waiting at the ford of a brook in Algiers, at a spot where a certain black lion usualy crossed to get his weekly supply of beef from the Arabs' cattle, corralled on the plain. The hunter sat on a stone that overlooked the steep sides of the ford, bracing his feet on a root which curved out of the bank.

Suddenly from the other side of the brook, half a mile up the hill, he heard the heavy moaning that precedes the lion's roar, and then his full-toned voice belched forth its detonations.

In a few minutes, opposite to where he was sitting, there came a sigh and a long moan. He looked and saw the eyes of the lion, like two burning coals, fastened upon him. They disappeared and he heard the lion splashing in the water. Then he saw the eyes again, glowing at him six paces distant.

Taking aim as accurately as the darkness would permit, he pulled the trigger of his rifle and the flash revealed the lion struggling in the water. Gerard withdrew his foot from the root and stood ready to fire the second barrel; but he could see and hear nothing except the swirl of the brook and the flashes of its foam. Unwilling to explore such a region of shadows with a wounded lion waiting somewhere in it he returned to the Arab's camp.

The next morning on going to the spot of his night adventure the first thing he saw was the root on which he had braced his feet cut in two by the lion's teeth and the bank beneath furrowed by his claws. At the edge of the brook a small piece of bone was found. The ball had broken the lion's shoulder, but not a trace of him could be found that day.

The next day the Arabs found him on the side of the mountain. He charged them and would have made short work of men and horses had he not dragged after him a broken leg. Gerard found him halting in a small opening, lashing his tail and growling. On the other side of the brook were sixty armed but trembling Arab horsemen.

Gerard dismounted and started after the lion, who had gone into a thicket. A stone thrown in caused the lion to dash out. The hunter fired; his ball struck the beast in the forehead. He fell, but instantly reared on his hind legs. The second ball pierced the heart and he fell over dead.

NINETY DAYS' WORK.

A consolidated statement prepared by Major John A. Johnston, Assistant Adjutant General, says a Washington dispatch, shows that of the 277,500 men authorized by Congress to be enlisted in the regular and volunteer armies, 254,479 up to July 22 had been mustered into the service. Of the 23,031 yet required to complete the authorized quota 13,308 are regulars, 8,000 are volunteers under the second call, 862 are immunes and 851 are engineers.

The recruiting, mustering, equipping and placing in the field of the present great army of nearly 300,000 in less than ninety days, nearly every man having to undergo a strict examination, is regarded by army experts as a wonderful achievement. Officers representing the the great armies of European nations have been amazed at the work accomplished and admit frankly that Europe contains little such fighting material as is to be found in abundance in the United States.
