NATURAL HISTORY GALLERY OF THE BISHOP MUSEUM

One of the most prominent features, and one which lends to the collections in the Bishop Museum a particular interest, is the organization and method shown in the exhibition of specimens. The entire Hawaiian collection is separated from the remainder of the Pacific curios and occupies the new and magnificent Hawaiian Hall. A recent visit to the Museum with a view to examining our insular fauna and flora was well repaid. Entering the Museum by its main entrance and turning to the right through the Hawaiian vestibule in which are preserved the Mineralogical specimens, Paleontological corals and other exhibits, Hawaiian Hall is reached. This splendid room, some 100 feet long by 50 feet wide, is surrounded by two galleries upheld upon massive bronzed pillars which carry the eye aloft to the graceful Norman arches which surmount the whole. The great hall is beautifully finished in island koa, a display in itself worth a special visit and probably unequalled of its kind in any public institution. From the ceiling depends a magnificent specimen of a sperm whale nearly 60 feet long showing on one side the colossal skeleton and on the other the appearance of the actual animal, for this denizen of the deep—which at one time before sugar held sway, afforded the chief commercial support of the Islands—is a true mammal suckling its young in the same manner as its terrestrial congeners. A model of the whale which affords the celebrated bone is also shown as well as the entire skeletons of sharks and smaller whales. The basement of the hall is devoted to the exhibition of domestic, religious and other relics of the Hawaiian race, and the upper gallery to the library and private offices of the staff, but it was not to these our attention was directed, and after entering our name in the visitor's book and purchasing a well illustrated hand-book, we ascended the stair-case and arrived at the Natural History Gallery. The first object of our attention was a comparative study of a splendid collection of casts of the brilliant fish which inhabit our tropical waters. These are displayed in low cases which run entirely round the gallery to our left and are colored so naturally that one can easily imagine oneself a visitor at the fish market—although never surely was such a picturesque display seen there at one time. Here are to be seen representatives of nearly all our fishes, the quaint, the gaudy, the diminutive, the rare, the commonplace, alike finding a place in sizes varying from a few inches to several feet, and shades of color innumerable. After these an extensive collection of birds from the Southwestern Pacific is seen following along the same low cases, then a collection of Hawaiian bird's eggs and nests, another of polished Hawaiian woods and finally a splendid collection of colored fruit casts in which wellnigh every fruit indigenous and introduced finds a place. By this time we have completed the round of the gallery and arrived at the point we commenced. Our attention has however only been given to half of the specimens—those on our left, and we again followed the gallery round to inspect the large handsome wall cases. In these are seen groups of birds showing their natural habitat and domestic economy. The black-footed albatross fills one case, its nests, its young and eggs and mature birds all being seen as in nature. The next case is devoted to another species of albatross, as fully shown. Not the least of the useful features is the comprehensive cards which describe the life and manners of these groups fully. The Hawaiian owl is also seen with its three young or different sizes due to the habit of the parent of commencing incubation as soon as the first egg is laid. The heron, Hawaii goose, and tropic bird groups also fill large cases. Others are devoted to stuffed specimens of other and rarer ornithological specimens, such as the extinct wingless rail. A collection of corals is also seen and another of our island crustaceae, while deposited in drawers below the wall cases surrounding the gallery, to delight the school-boy will be found specimens of all the Hawaiian land shells.

A CHARMED VISITOR.

IN DEFENSE OF MITCHELL

THE SENATOR FROM OREGON IS WARMLY DEFENDED BY A CITIZEN OF HAWAII WHO FEELS THAT HIS LONG SERVICE TO HIS COUNTRY AND HIS PARTY IS A STRONG TRAVERSE OF THE ACCUSATION MADE BY A CONVICTED LAND THIEF.

EDITOR STAR:—The indictment of United States Senator John H. Mitchell by a Federal grand jury charged with receiving two thousand dollars for influencing the land department at Washington seems to be hailed with delight by the Democratic press of the country and the California Democrats have published to the world all his alleged misdeeds, but in no instance have his accusers been able to establish guilt. The veteran statesman has easily held his place in the foremost rank of politics because the men who have known him well are satisfied that he is not corrupt and it will require more evidence than that of the land thief who hopes to escape the penalty of his crimes by attempting to implicate John H. Mitchell, lawyer, statesman, friend and Republican. He has only to be known and you are his friend for life. If he had been corrupt he would not be poor as he is today, he has rendered services to his country and his party that cannot be estimated. In his hour of trial he will have the support of thousands of the best men in the United States. He has taken an interest in Hawaiian affairs, has given his vote and great influence to establish in these islands an American territory in fact as well as in name. He has protected the weak and in a thousand instances prevented injustice and wrong from being done. The Administration owes him a debt it can never pay, for in the Senate he has skillfully guided its measures to final enactment when they seemed doomed. The State of Oregon has been kept within the fold of Republicanism by his tact and diplomacy. A doubtful state, pretty evenly divided on national issues, it would have been lost to the party but for Senator Mitchell.

A man who has been able in the face of calumny and accusation, to dominate the politics of Oregon, must be a remarkable man, and there must be a force behind that is mighty, for he has survived the most bitter attacks of powerful enemies and overcome all obstacles, and the mighty affairs entrusted to him by his colleagues in the Senate demonstrate that the confidence remains unshaken. In the face of an indictment which is but a mere accusation and from which no presumption arises save that of innocence, Senator Mitchell can well rest assured that his thousands of good deeds will be remembered so that his sterling qualities and his long life of usefulness will be recalled as well as the unproved accusations that have been made against him to prepare that greatest of all tribunals, the people, to see to it that he gets a fair and impartial trial and that if the attempt to connect him with bribery fails, as I believe it must, he will shine brighter in the Constellation of American statesmen.

A REPUBLICAN.

WHAT, INDEED?

A forcible illustration of the magnitude of the war in the far East is given in the statement of a correspondent of Scribner's magazine that more ammunition has been used in a single day in Manchuria than was consumed in the whole Spanish-American war. If that mild collision made us a "world power," what at that rate is to be made of the winner in the present colossal struggle?
