Women and Others

A careworn looking woman, with eight children, stopped a street car. As the conductor turned to the woman and said, good-naturedly: "Are these all your children, madam, or is it a picnic?"

"They are all mine," she replied, "and it is no picnic!"

King Oscar of Sweden is a poet of no mean order, and his sonnets have been translated into most of the languages of Europe. He is an accomplished musician, too, his nautical songs, set to his own music, being very popular in the Swedish navy. He has written histories and dramas, translated classics, and is the author of some hymns which enjoy the highest popularity. Finally, as a tenor singer he is always welcome at concerts.

The silken frock in some one or another of its many fascinating phases reigns supreme. Taffetas, lousine, one-seam crepe de chine, chiffon, and silk mull are all used, and one sees all varieties of formality in dress represented in these. The debutante and the dowager seem to select the very same materials, and there is but a trifling difference in the fashions which Madame La Mode dictates for each.

Rubbed up daily with a pad of tissue paper mirrors keep in beautiful condition. To cleanse them if neglected, dip a cloth in methylated spirits and then precipitated whiting, and rub this well over the glass, being careful however, not to touch the frame with it or to let it get under the frame, as that it not easy to remove. When dry rub up well with a chamolise leather or a pad of clean old soft newspaper.

It is said that in Arabia there are people who ply trade called gossiping. These people gather together and the latest news and all the best jokes and stories, and go from house to house, spinning the yarns they have gathered at so much per hour. They are called gossips and they make plenty of money.

The Countess Festetics, granddaughter of James B. Haggis, launched the other day with her step-grandmother, Mrs. Haggis, and her aunt and niece, Mrs. Richard Lounsbury and Miss Edith Lounsbury.

The countess was frocked in a black-voile costume, with lace white stock, guimpe and lower sleeves, topped by a black hat.

The hat was decidedly Parisian in effect, and, unlike many of those having the exaggerated forehead tip and the ultra-raised back, was an especially effective chapeau for its wearer.

It was narrow in the front and tilted downward, rising at the sides to the back, where it was of exaggerated height, but did not stand out far, as do some of the latest and most outre of recent French importations. Large, black ostrich plumes rising from the sides and drooping over the high back formed the only decoration.

The gown had a trailing skirt, having several deep tucks as trimming, and was gathered at the top. The bodice matched the skirt, and was cut out at the top to show a round guimpe of white lace over chiffon. The sleeves of less than elbow length were gathered and had tucks, giving a ruffle effect. The undersleeves came nearly to the wrists, were fluffy at their tops and scanty at the bottom.

A little bric-a-brac well chosen is better than much poorly chosen. With all due respect to a good old custom, Christmas is to be blamed for more unsightliness in the average home than any other cause. "For the sake of the giver" is made the excuse for many decorative atrocities; "dear friends" with miserable taste and the best intentions in the world send around a remarkable collection of junk during holiday time, and common decency forces the recipient to give it standing room for awhile. Blessed, indeed, is the parlor maid who annihilates some of the gift vases and plaques. The woman with many friends should have a "present" room, into which these odds and ends of decorative errors could be put and kept.

It will be twenty years next April since Denman Thompson first appeared in his famous role of Joshua Whitcomb, in "The Old Homestead."

Some men are very vain. Some men are so vain that had they been born women they could not be vain. A barber shop or a saloon finds it impossible to do business without mirrors, and the rule often is, "the more mirrors the more business." A "lady barber" in a recent interview in a New York newspaper told of the particularity with which men concern themselves with the kink in the ends of the mustache, the curl of the hair, the location of the hair, the location of the part, the effect of the front, side and back view, the variety of pomatum, the brand of brillantine, the scent of perfumery and the downy softness of the powder puff. The "lady barber" gave it as her professional opinion that for vanity the brother leads the sister and the husband is ahead of the wife.

Mrs. T. P. O'Connor, wife of the noted Irish member of Parliament, who is better known as "Tay Pay" editor of "M. A. P.," "T. P.'s Weekly," "The Era" and several other London publications, came to New York on the White Star liner Teutonic a few days ago unheralded and unsung. Mrs. O'Connor came here, first, because she was homesick for her native land. She is an American girl by birth and is, she says, a more intelligent American now than she was when she went to England twenty years ago. In the second place she came here because she has a play or two to sell and she looks upon New York as a better market for her wares than London.

Mrs. O'Connor is a great admirer of Hall Caine and an intimate friend of George Bernard Shaw. Mr. Caine, she said, had shown himself to be a splendid dramatist, who "wrote down" to the English people. London likes his plays, for his writings suit them better probably than they do the Americans.

A lecturer at Bryn Mawr, a well-known finishing school for young ladies, situated on the outskirts of Philadelphia, in a recent talk told her hearers that they must not be frumps, but must tidy up and make themselves attractive, as the time has gone by for a woman to be excused for any shortcomings in this regard simply because she has a superior education. An opinion has been expressed in some quarters that the time never existed when women could be negligent in dress or put on airs on account of educational attainments, and those who hold to it are just mean enough to insist that statistics support their contention. Of course, to do so they are obliged to assume that the failure of so many college women to get married is due rather to lack of opportunity than to disinclination, an assumption which will no doubt be scornfully rejected, but which has some color lent to it by the common belief that an attractive girl dressed in good taste has a better show in the matrimonial market than a brilliantly educated woman otherwise deficient.

A woman came on the witness stand and, when the judge asked her age, replied:

"Thirty years."
"Thirty years old," said the Judge. "Were you not in this courtroom five years ago?"
"I think I was, your honor."
"And didn't you tell me then that you were 20 years old?"
"I think it is quite likely, your honor," said the woman, wholly unabashed. "I am not one of those women who say one thing one day and another thing the next."

In several English and American papers lately an attempt has been made to find a concise accurate definition of the word "home." In the great array of answers brought out, nearly all emphasize the idea of its being the place where father, mother and a whole nest full of happy children gather in mutual confidence and love. But there are still homes, happy homes without number, from whence the children have flown or to which perchance they never came. Homes from which the dear father and mother have long since been taken, and homes in which the solitary have been set by Providence.

While on this account the idea of home varies in detail according to individual circumstances, might not a broad general characterization be the place where each heart cries to be when misfortune overtakes, or great happiness comes? The place where our loved ones still abide or the place where our most cherished belongings are gathered; in brief, our earthly fortress, refuge, shrine, treasure house heart's ease. What woman could wish for a wider sphere of influence and usefulness than to be the center of a home for though "many make the household," 'tis the woman makes the home.

PARKER CASE IS THROWN OUT

JUDGE LINDSAY RESCINDS ORDER MAKING J. S. LOW NEXT FRIEND AND DISMISSES SUIT.

The Parker ranch case came to an abrupt close yesterday afternoon. Judge Lindsay threw the whole case out of court. When the argument over the motion to remove J. S. Low as next friend was finished, the judge ruled at once in favor of the motion. Then he dismissed the entire suit. His decision was as follows:

"I do not in giving my decision intend to say very much. In fact, I think the less said the better.

"From the evidence in this case it seems that several corporations existed upon the Island of Hawaii that had for their purpose the exploiting of the water in the Kohala mountain shed. The personnel of the stockholders and officers in these corporations were practically the same, and, as far as the court is aware from the evidence, consisted principally of Mr. Samuel Parker, whose interest has not perhaps been exactly stated to the court; but there is no hiding the fact that he was one of the chief men in the corporations. That J. T. McCrosson was the active spirit in this; that John Hind, of Kohala, had also some interest in some of these corporations. Mr. J. S. Low was the manager of the firm of Hind, Rolph and Company, and also was an officer, secretary I believe, in one of these corporations, the corporations being desirous of obtaining a right of way across a piece of land belonging to the minor, Annie T. K. Parker; and it appears that McCrosson had had some little talks with the guardian over this, and, according to his way of thinking, had been refused the right of way. But it is in evidence that he acquainted Mr. Low with these facts, and urged that Mr. Low do something towards compelling the guardian to either give this right of way, or to sell a piece of land that she owned there, for the sum of $124,000. Mr. Low, armed with this one thought, the thought of getting a right of way across the land of the minor, proceeds to an attorney, Mr. Magoon, and states his case to him. It develops in time that he is informed, or he comes to believe, that the proper method of proceeding should be in the nature of a petition to remove the guardian of the minor. His whole avowed intent in going to see the lawyer at first was to forward the interests of the Hamakua Ditch Company; his own language on the stand was that he was urged by the active manager, McCrosson, to do so. In this case, there can be no doubt that the interests of the minor, which the next friend alleges to have had, was a secondary thought; it was only conveyed to him after a consultation with his counsel, and in fact he himself says he knew nothing whatever about the charges of mismanagement of the guardian. This all cropped up after the suit was brought. Eben Low was engaged actively in collecting data at these times.

"A motion was brought by respondent and filed in court, seeking to enquire into the status of J. S. Low, and to enquire into his motives, and to see if he was a fit person to act as next friend. That motion, as I understand it, by my predecessor was not passed upon, but in order to escape the laborious task of having to go twice through the evidence, which he considered would be necessary, in order to arrive at a proper conclusion as to the motives of the next friend this motion was delayed, or postponed, to be decided when this case was tried upon its merits. A later motion was made by the next friend and his attorneys for counsel fees, attorneys' fees, for costs and attorneys' fees, which this court also postponed.

"The motion now before the court is the motion to rescind the authority of J. S. Low, next friend, to act, and to dismiss this suit. After having heard all the evidence in this case, which has taken some sixty days, this court is very much of the opinion, has not the slightest bit of doubt, that the suit as a whole against the guardian should be dismissed, and upon its own motion so orders, that the main suit against the guardian herein be dismissed. And that the motion that we are now dealing with to rescind the order appointing J. S. Low, as next friend, be granted, and that the suit be dismissed, with costs to the next friend. It is so ordered."
