

BAKERS

Not the men who make your bread, but in a stove sense the gas stoves are good bakers and you will get a satisfaction out of the use of one of them that cannot be had in a wood or coal stove that costs a good deal more to run. There is simplicity about a gas stove that is not equalled in the other.

TOWN TALK

By The Man About Town.

"It is hard for a public man in Honolulu to build a house," said a local politician, having in mind some recent experiences of home-builders. "If he employs Jap labor he has to get out of politics. If he employs citizen labor he has to go into bankruptcy."

I wandered down by the Board of Health building on the night of the last primary (writes a friend) for the purpose of satisfying my curiosity about the contest. As I drew near and entered the sphere of the bright incandescents I was suddenly startled by a loud voice calling a name that I had not heard for years. "D. G. Camarinos," said the voice. The name called up many picturesque recollections. In my mind's eye I saw again the familiar figure with its stouchy Panama hat and it seemed that I could almost hear again the jolly "very touching" which poor Cammy gleefully used as his last stock joke. Mournful reflections over poor Cammy's sudden taking off were interrupted by a repetition of the voice: "D. G. Camarinos." Then it was repeated several times. It was being passed down the line by a row of natives. I stepped into the building puzzled over the mystery. Then all was explained. They were trying to vote poor Cammy—they were voting him. It was near the time for closing the polls, and all that was necessary to settle the result was to prevent the opposition getting at the polls. So, with great deliberation they began to call rolls—of the dead and absent, and though like Cammy all responded not, they took up the time. Poor Cammy! He will be useful a long time yet.

A friend of A. G. M. Robertson's told me the other day that he was afraid to go to Tantalus any more, because the trip involves a ride through Portuguese town and a lot of the Portuguese think he is Judge Robinson. I don't believe that Aleck was afraid to go, but it is probably true that a lot of Portuguese have him mixed up with the judge. But not many. At the Portuguese mass meeting at the Orpheum, one of the most prominent speakers was Robertson, who had a box seat from which he quietly watched the row. Perhaps he had as one reason for going, the idea of showing that he was not the "Judge Rob." of which we have heard so much.

"This climate is fearful on books," remarked a friend. It is no wonder that there are a lot of illiterate people here. Some time ago I bought a set of Kipling on the installment plan and before I got half through paying for them the cockroaches had eaten all the labels off the books and I now don't know what I am reading."

In the reported death of Charles H. Bishop, Hawaii loses a good friend. Bishop was a mighty, true friend and a doughty champion when he favored a person or a cause. He was an ardent Democrat and he spent his money freely in an effort to convert his constituents of Kaula to his way of political thought. The story of his life in Hawaii would be a succession of incidents of kindly acts and generous impulses.

As the Mauna Loa steamed along the western coast of Kaula the other day, Speaker Knudsen discussed with some of the party the difficulties which the topography and climatic conditions of that part of Kaula presented to any scheme of settlement by small owners. He pointed out square miles of arid mountain now held in large area under long lease from the government, in which he said there were few springs worthy of the name, on which rain seldom fell; and where only a few wild cattle and goats found a precarious living.

Further along toward Makaweli, there were slopes that looked fertile, and with water were fertile, but to which no wagon road could be built except by the use of the pick and blasting powder and at much expense. But Kekaha plantation presented the most striking problem of all. Here is a plantation twelve miles long and very narrow, on government land, the lease of which expires in fourteen or fifteen years. The lessees at an expense of a quarter of a million dollars have built a great ditch tapping one of the rivers up in the mountains to bring water to the plantation. The water is taken from government land, is distributed and used on government land. When the lease expires all this quarter of a million dollars worth of improvements will become the property of the government.

What is it going to do with it? Will

"SUCCESS TO CRIME" AGAIN TONIGHT

TREMENDOUS HIT OF THURSDAY EVENING WILL BE REPEATED THIS EVENING.

"Success to Crime," the tremendous hit of Thursday evening at the Opera House is to be put on for the last time this evening. The management has been requested to put the show on for a third time but they decided not to do so. To-night will be absolutely the last time the public will have a chance to see this success. For it was a success. Every one who attended the show came away satisfied and had a good work for the show.
This evening the house will be crowded for the second time. There are only a few seats left at the box office and those are mostly scattering. The demand yesterday for seats made a new record for a run on seats in Honolulu. Those in charge of the office were busy early and late. A full house is assured.

Unless Admiral Beckley gets a new chauffeur, that automobile that his many friends took such trouble to present to him, will soon be a thing of the past. The other afternoon the admiral's automobile, fortunately with the Admiral not in it, came very near being run down by an electric car on King street. The fault was with the young man who was driving the auto. In a spirit of youthful assiduity, the youth deliberately ran the machine as closely in front of an approaching electric car as possible. Both conveyances were moving rapidly at the time. Had not the motorman checked the car, there would have been a collision, with the Admiral's auto and three young hopefuls piled on the street. As a friend of the Admiral I want to protest against such careless use of his automobile.

A woman went to the police station a couple of weeks ago—it was just preceding the election of officers in the Republican primary clubs,—to report the theft of a baby carriage. "Oh, you lose baby carriage," said an officer. "Well more better you come back. We too busy with politics now to attend to such little things. You come back after we get through with the elections."

I wonder how many people wrote to their friends in Washington and elsewhere, on hearing the report that "Our Jack" was to resign as secretary of the Territory? It would be interesting to know. When signs of a nice political job becoming vacant appear here, those who have lightning rods in the air quietly write to their Senator friends, or other friends supposed to have influence, and intimate that the rods are all ready for business. So I have no doubt that the publication of the fact that Atkinson might resign resulted in a little increase of mail matter en route to Washington.

Why isn't the Judiciary building clock lit up at night? Most towns of Honolulu's size have at least one big clock behind which lights burn all the night and such clocks are a great public convenience. The Judiciary clock is a fine big one, centrally located, and it is in a tower which could easily be lit up, for the government's electric wires reach the building. The tower should be wired and lit up, for the benefit of the belated ones who have soaked their watches before starting home.

They have had another one of those revolutions in the San Francisco newspaper offices which come in cycles, and when they do come, tear things up, and probably no newspaper revolutions, except in the office of the New York Herald, ever do tear things. One of the peculiar things about the San Francisco upheavals is that like their earth-quake, they make a clean sweep. All three of the morning papers experienced the shakes-up this time, as usual.

A friend of mine, writing me on the subject, says that from all accounts, McNaught, who up to the time of the cyclone was the whole thing on the Call, was frozen out. Apparently he liked the temperature or else believed in homeopathy, for he has gone to Alaska. Joe Mansfield, who went to the Call from the Examiner at the time John D. threw Charlie Shortridge out, was himself thrown out with McNaught, and has gone back to the Examiner.

Hornick, business manager, and Ernest Simpson City Editor of the Chronicle, have become manager and managing editor, respectively of the Call, and Hubert E. Hunt, who for years has done railroads and hotels, and the big assignments for the Chronicle, has become City Editor of the Chronicle. No man in San Francisco, probably, has as wide a personal acquaintance among the prominent men of California and the Pacific slope as Hunt, and there is scarcely a railroad man in the country that he does not know personally, and doesn't know his entire railroad connection.

My friend says that immediately following the earthquake and fire, all the San Francisco papers cut their staffs down almost to nothing. But now they are recruiting them up to a war footing, and it looks as though there would be keen competition and a period of newspaper hustle among the San Francisco newspapers.

Although Guy Livingston made a hit with the audience on last Thursday evening he will do much better on the coming performance of this evening, for he is in a much better condition. Thursday evening he got out of a sick bed in order to go on the stage and take his part. He did well then, but tonight he will be in his own shape and the Honolulu public know what that means.

Remember that this evening is the last time there will be a chance to see the hit of the season of 1906 by the amateurs of Honolulu. As one of the critics remarked: "It was no crime, it was a success."
