MAY TAX LEI GIRLS

HEAD SELLERS HAVE BEEN ASKED FOR LICENSE AND THE LEI WOMEN COME NEXT.

A committee of Hawaiian women called on the Governor this morning to protest because a policeman had ordered them to stop selling head leis and other specimens of their handiwork on the wharves and streets. The policeman, according to the women, had told them that they must take out a license costing $50 per year in order to be allowed to carry on their trade. They were referred to Sheriff Iaukea, with instructions to come back, in case they could not get relief from him.

A good deal of adverse comment was caused by persons who learned of the action of the police, which is said to have been instigated by curio dealers who would monopolize the business. As yet the vendors of flower leis have not been molested.

STEAMER SERVICE

There is talk of the possibility of the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company, controlled here, branching out and including in its fleet a modern steamship of sufficient tonnage to take the San Francisco-Honolulu run regularly. If it owned a liner the Inter-Island Company, which is about to install mechanical coaling apparatus, would find it an economy as well as a good investment otherwise, for it ships a large amount of freight for its own use from the Coast and freight for other island ports, which would have to be transferred here to island boats in any event, could be less expensively handled from the hold of the Inter-Island's own ocean-goer than from the vessels of other lines.

BREAKS FURNITURE THREATENS WIFE

THE CHARGES BROUGHT AGAINST TOMAZO FERREIRA IN A DIVORCE COMPLAINT.

Tomazo Ferreira has filed libel for divorce from Manuel Guilherme Ferreira, whom she charges great cruelty and violence towards herself and children, and with threatening to kill her, on different occasions.

According to the libel the couple were married in 1903, and have one child, besides four to the wife by a previous marriage. Since two years after the marriage the defendant has been drinking heavily, and abusing his family and breaking the furniture. He was arrested once for threatening his wife with a revolver, but released on his wife's withdrawing her complaint. Since then he has committed various acts of violence so that his wife has been unable to live with him.

Judge De Bolt has issued a temporary restraining order, enjoying the defendant from in any way interfering with the petitioner.

COULD NOT FIND ANY POLYGAMY

MAUI GRAND JURY COMES TO CONCLUSION THAT JUDGE KEPOLKAI WAS MISTAKEN.

Deputy Attorney General Whitney returned home this morning from Lahaina where he went the first of the week to attend court. One of the interesting features of the session was the final return of the grand jury in which a report was made to Judge Kepolikai on the matter of the investigation of the alleged polygamous lives which some of the County officials are living. On this matter in his charge to the grand jury, Judge Kepolikai had laid special stress.

The jury, however, thought that the court must have been mistaken in his information, for it reported that it could not find sufficient evidence to warrant any indictments being found, and asked that the matter be referred to the next grand jury.

DOLE AWARDS $17,500

whereof the use of such chain in connection with the said wildcat was dangerous to those attending to it. Such chain and wildcat were placed on board the Fullerton just previous to the said voyage, with the full knowledge of the master and other agents of the Fullerton of such misfit. The towing chain was, during the said towing operations, lashed to a towing bit, an upright timber three to three and one-half feet square, rising out of the deck forward of the wheel. Such lashing previous to the accident was made with an old rope, by the order of the master, against the remonstrance of libellant. After dark in the evening of December 24th, with the ship pitching into a choppy sea, the towing chain started to slip over the wildcat, breaking such lashing, and libellant, with the assistance of some of the crew, attempted to lash it more firmly to the said towing bit to stop and prevent such slipping, and while so engaged the chain slipped suddenly over the wildcat and violently struck libellant, throwing him down and pinning and crushing his right arm against the towing bit, breaking some of the bones and bruising and tearing the muscles and ligaments. At the time of this accident the Fullerton was toward 600 miles away from Port Harford and about 1500 miles from Kihel. Libellant requested the master to return to Port Harford for medical assistance, but the master decided to continue the voyage to Kihel. After landing at Kihel libellant's arm was amputated near the shoulder.

"As to the first question, counsel for libellee has contended that because no proper chain for use on board the Fullerton, in connection with her wildcat, could be obtained in San Francisco or Oakland, and could not be obtained from the East for two months, they had done all which prudence and the exigencies of the situation required; in other words, in order to save the Fullerton from loss by delay, the ship was deliberately sent to sea with appliances which were admittedly unsafe for the use of the crew, and her agents were justified in so doing. The mere statement of the proposition refutes the contention. If the ship could not make proper preparations for sea, and chose to go to sea without them, it was a deliberate assumption by her of all risks and all damages which might result from such want of preparation, which would include all damages that the crew might suffer in the way of injury through such want of preparation. The only way out of it would have been to have acquainted the crew before departure with the defect and its danger, and to have given them an opportunity to decline to make the voyage or to make it with their eyes open to the danger, and accepting the risk."

The judge rules against a contention that the libellant knowingly assumed the risk of handling the defective apparatus and against a claim of recklessness and negligence on the part of the vessel which would have put back to Port Harford for medical aid, when the accident happened:

"It does not appear that the master took the injury to libellant very seriously; on the contrary, he treated it rather nonchalantly. He does not appear to have given the subject much deliberation, although he says he thought the whole matter over and came to the conclusion to continue the voyage. Upon libellant's urgent request to return for fear of serious consequences to his arm if the voyage was continued, the master answered, according to libellant's testimony, 'that will be all right, you know I can't turn around, it would cost me too much money, see how much it will cost to turn around, and the steamer will not go with me anyway.' He made no attempt to procure the assistance of the Lansing in the matter, either to return with the Fullerton or to convey libellant to Port Harford, leaving the Fullerton to finish her voyage alone.

"Although the time which would have been required for the return was uncertain, I find from the evidence that the prospects of obtaining speedy medical assistance were decidedly more favorable in case of a return to Port Harford than by a continuance of the voyage to Kihel, and that the seriousness of the libellant's condition required the adoption of the most promising plan.

"As to the amount of damages, I consider that the libellant's earning capacity may be reasonably estimated to be not over one-third of what it was before the injury. He is incapacitated from performing work as a seaman, but may still earn something on land. He had been earning in wages and perquisites one hundred and fifty dollars a month, and was earning on the Fullerton in wages and perquisites one hundred and forty dollars a month, with the chance of making it up to one hundred and fifty dollars. He was forty years old on the first of last February, and his expectation of life at the time of his accident was 28.18 years, with a discount for the sea service on a sailing vessel corresponding to five years, which is represented, in the practice of the life insurance companies by a correspondingly higher pr. sum. According to these somewhat arbitrary rules, which, however, appear to be the best we have, the libellant is entitled to an amount which at a reasonable rate of interest compounded annually will furnish him with twelve hundred dollars per annum for the rest of his life, dating from December 24th, 1906, the time of the accident, which is here estimated at 28.18 years. I have taken six per cent as approximating to a conservative and average rate of interest in this country, as the basis of the estimate of this amount and find the result to be fourteen thousand eight hundred and sixteen dollars and ninety-five cents, ($14,816.95). The libellant is also entitled to damages on account of his intense and long-continued sufferings of mind and body brought upon him through the negligence of the representatives of the ship. I find for the libellant in the sum of seventeen thousand and five hundred dollars ($17,500.00), in the aggregate, and costs.

HABEAS CORPUS TRIED.

Ching Tai, one of the famous "37 others" in the Chinese gambling case which has been in the courts since last winter, was brought before Judge De Bolt this morning on a writ of habeas corpus. The writ was signed this morning by the court, and made returnable at 11 o'clock, but at that time it was put over for hearing until next Monday at 2 p. m. Ching was picked up by High Sheriff Henry last Wednesday night after a search of about a week and locked up to serve a six months' sentence, by the Circuit Court, the judgment of which had been sustained by the Supreme Court. W. W. Thayer and R. W. Breckons, attorneys for the Chinaman, applied for the writ on the grounds that the Supreme Court had not disposed of the case and had not set aside the bond on which Ching Tai had been released, and therefore their client was being confined without due process.
