FLEET PRESS MEN DINED

BANQUET GIVEN BY COMMERCIAL CLUB TO VISITING AND LOCAL NEWSPAPER WRITERS.

The dinner given by the Commercial Club last Saturday night with the fleet press correspondents and the local newspapermen as guests was a most delightful affair. President George W. Smith presided, seated at the head of a long table with the guests of the evening. Franklin Matthews, of the New York Sun, and R. H. Patchin, of the New York Herald, sat on each side of the president and at the foot of the table was W. R. Farrington with R. D. Mead, editor of the Planters' Monthly, and H. L. Clotworthy, of the United Press Association.

The tables were effectively decorated and a delicious menu was served, following which President Smith made a short speech in which he introduced Mr. Farrington as toastmaster. Before doing this he called for a silent toast to the President of the United States, which was drunk standing. Farrington called upon the representative of the United Press Association first.

Mr. Clotworthy told of being here for three days during the war of 1898, when he was a member of a Colorado regiment. He told of his fondness for Hawaii and of its being the most beautiful place on earth in his opinion and then took up the trip of the Atlantic fleet. Its greatest result would be, he said, the development of a national instead of a sectional feeling. That through this trip, which some had opposed, the Middle West, which had once looked askance at our Navy, would support it strongly. He referred to Pearl Harbor as the greatest naval base that the country would ever possess and stated that, with an outpost such as this in the Pacific, the United States would ensure to all nations free trade on the Pacific. In closing, the newspaperman stated that he hoped to return here before long and to find, after the establishment of the Pearl Harbor naval base and the opening of the Panama Canal, the harbor crowded with merchantmen, all bearing the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. Matthews was next called on and made the speech of the evening. He said in part:

"Gentlemen, I want to speak of one thing in particular. Your Pearl Harbor here is as important as the city of New York. I do not mean by that to say that it is the greatest thing on earth, but with such an outpost in the midst of the Pacific we can urge on the Oriental commerce and make it definite that there shall be no trouble among the nations of the world in the waters of the Far East. We must have peace in the Pacific Ocean and the United States will have that peace if she has to fight for it.

"There may have been many reasons for the sending of this fleet around the Horn. President Roosevelt himself told me that there were, and then remained wisely silent. I believe, however, that the President's one idea was to show to the nations of the world that the United States had arrived and to show our country as a nation before the world. The United States means by this parade of ships to ensure a free field for all on the Pacific. We do not mean that anyone else shall tell us to get out, but we shall remain and shall have the markets of the Orient opened wide to us and also to all other nations."

R. H. Patchin was next called on and commented on the fact that Honolulu had not run her entertainment of the fleet into the ground by having many official functions to which the officers would be ordered and compelled to go, whether they wished to or not. When that was done he said, it gave the officers no time to make personal acquaintances. Here he said it was evident that everyone was turning to and would make both officers and men have a good time.

A few words from C. L. Rhodes, of the Advertiser, closed the speaking and the evening's entertainment was completed by the playing on various old-style Hawaiian musical instruments by an old Hawaiian named Haona from Puna. He played on the conch, nose flute and ukeke, and sang moles and hulas to the gourd accompaniment.

Music by a native orchestra and female vocalists throughout the dinner proved a great delight to the visitors.

Admiral Sperry and his staff spent yesterday at Pearl Harbor, inspecting the site for the proposed Naval station, the trip being made in the tug Iroquois and return being made last evening.

They'd never met before;
They met but once,
And she was smitten sore.
They never met again—
Don't care to, I allow;
They met but once—
The auto and the cow.
