MOUNT HOOD GETS ACTIVE

SMOKE IS POURING FROM THE CRATER OF OREGON'S HISTORIC PEAK.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 28.—With earthquakes, sun spots planets, comets and auroras active, Mount Hood, whose towering snowy top is seen from this city, has grown restive and is emitting smoke for the first time in 30 years, according to mountain climbers here today.

The smoke is only visible here in the morning against the sky lighted by a morning sun. A party of mountaineers returning from the mountain confirm the presence of the phenomenon.

Scientists here express no surprise over the activity of the mountain, declaring that the mountain is in direct sympathy with the earth crust of the northern continent.
