MARCH OF FLOWERS TO SILENT CITY

the weather, and who knows but that an exalted mind turns away many a physical inconvenience. Slush and mud, and spluttering auto wheels, added to material discomfort of the event, and the National Guard tramped uncomplainingly through dirt and splutter, to say nothing of the usually immaculate white-robed bandboys, who blew their instruments and beat their drums as if there was no such thing as rain.

CEREMONIES IN CEMETERY.

The Hawaiian band played appropriate music in the cemetery during the rain, crowds standing among the graves, some with rain protectors and most without, after which followed the Gettysburg speech of Abraham Lincoln, read by Lyle Dickey, and printed in full elsewhere. The impressive ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic was read, the observances being in charge of George W. De Long Post of this city. And then there came the roll-call of the dead and the three volleys over the graves of departed soldiers, volleys that were as true as sharpshooters could make them, a score of rifles cracking as one, three times over.

ORATION OF THE DAY.

The Rev. A. C. McKeever delivered the oration of the day, facing the dripping multitude among the ornamental plants and stately trees, standing under an umbrella.

The crowd was in a quandary for it had just started to rain heavier than before, and the question seemed to be whether to stay and hear the eloquent McKeever, and get soaked or run for shelter or the cars and miss the oratory of the accomplished divine. Many fled for safety from the rain, though a large number remained to enjoy the inspiring words of the experienced speaker. The Rev. A. C. McKeever touched on the glorious significance of this day set apart by the nation for honoring the dead who died for the principles that stirred them to give up everything. Briefly he reviewed the horror of that terrible combat between the North and the South, when the union of the most enlightened country on earth was threatened; how that the soldiers of the North were fighting against slavery and for the freedom of all men, and that the brave men of the South were struggling for a victory not destined to be realized.

McKeever's speech was entirely extemporaneous and made a deep impression on all who remained to hear. It was not of the dead who are dead, but of the mortal death and the life everlasting after the sojourn in the remnant of clay that he spoke. His hearers were uplifted, and patriotism and hope swelled the breasts of all within the sound of his effective voice. Surely was he chosen well when he was asked to deliver the day's oration.

The graves in Numann cemetery, in fact the graves in all cemeteries, were this morning decked with an abundance of beautiful blossoms. Life graves of children were masses of flowers. Longer graves bore tokens of remembrance in profusion. All morning was there a procession to the resting places of dead, a procession of flowers borne by sorrowing ones or those who can never forget and who hope some day to meet, somehow, somewhere, the loved ones whom they mourn.

In the military line of march the Kamehameha School cadets showed up in splendid form. They left the cemetery early, before the ceremonies were over, on account of the rain.

The National Guardsmen made a fine showing. The veterans assembled at the Odd Fellows Building at a quarter to eight, where the memorial committee of which C. H. Dickey was chairman, received floral donations of friends up to eight o'clock.

OUR LITTLE DAUGHTER PE-RU-NA HELPED HER.

SADIE MAYHEW.

"Last October our little daughter, Sadie, was taken sick with catarrh of the bowels, or chronic enteritis, resulting in diarrhea.
"For three months we tried different doctors, without any benefit whatever. My wife and I had become very much discouraged, but decided to write to you.
"Through your advice and the use of your valuable medicine, Peruna, she began to improve from the very start, and in the course of eight or ten weeks she had entirely recovered.
"We cannot express our gratitude to you for your free consultation and advice. We shall always be glad to recommend Peruna to any one suffering from catarrhal affections."—Mr. R. A. Mayhew, Hickory Flat, Ky.

A Household Remedy.

Mrs. Lena O'Byrne, 625 Madison St., Topeka, Kan., writes: "We have used Peruna in our household for a good many years.
"I took it for a cough and a tonic. My husband used it and thinks there is nothing like it for hay fever, from which he suffered for years. I also give it to my children for coughs and colds, and my daughter, Mary, was cured of catarrh of the head by Peruna."
