NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—To all the speculation concerning the amount of the fortune left by the late Grover Cleveland there will be no answer in the report, which will be filed tomorrow with the Surrogate by inheritance Tax Appraiser William Blau. This report deals only with the New York property. The administration of the Cleveland estate has developed a peculiar situation, in that no report has been made to the appraiser on the amount of the estate beyond this jurisdiction.

"Rather than disclose the amount of the estate in New Jersey and elsewhere outside of New York, they are paying the full 5 per cent. inheritance tax on collateral legacies," Mr. Blau said.

It is thought that the entire estate was not more than $200,000.

HE'S BEEN HERE.

The Honolulu Commercial Advertiser contains an advertisement of a Republican primary meeting staged by the Chinese president of the precinct, the place of meeting to be a Japanese hotel. When the meeting takes place it is safe to say that there will be Chinese and Japanese Republicans present and the chances are that the politicians who run the affair will be principally Polynesian, some of whom cannot speak English; and that the active workers will include Portuguese and half whites of several derivations. If any white men are there they will have little to say as he is an unpopular minority.

ENGINEERS AT DINNER

In the embowered alcove at the foot of the dining hall a Hawaiian orchestra played and sang for the feast, many of the selections being of highest class and all beautifully rendered. Vases of red carnations adorned the tables.

Clarence Waterman sang a solo as a preliminary to the toast list, winning deservedly hearty applause. At an interval between speeches Connie Marina from the Park theater gave an amusing monologue.

Colonel Walter S. Schuyler, U. S. A., gave an intensely interesting account of the work of the Russian engineer corps along the line of the Siberia railway in the Russo-Japanese war. Some exciting bits of unwritten history were given, and the cavalry commander concluded with this axiomatic sentiment:

The lesson that he most learns from the outcome of the Russo-Japanese war is that in highly developed countries success commonly can be won of itself unless it is self-inflicted.

Walter B. Farrington responding with engaging grace for the press, he worked at the outset upon the impression of honor conferred upon that profession in being made the second toast at a banquet.

Governor Froom came next, sketching the history of the conservation movement in Hawaii. In leading up to the statement already quoted, he mentioned that Honolulu was really an artificial city, having been made what it is, in the tropical beauty that strangers praise, altogether by reclamation. Within his own memory the city plot was an arid waste. Water had created its present tropical splendor. Among other interesting statements the governor mentioned a project that has been mooted to carry water from Hilo to Kau district through a cement-lined ditch ninety miles in length.

Marston Campbell, superintendent of Public Works, gave a clear word picture of Honolulu's water supply. This had been developed according to the growth of the city. It would have been foolish for those who started the system in the city's infancy three-quarters of a century ago to plan for 50,000 population. Today there were visible resources of water for 100,000 people, but money was needed for suitable pipes to deliver the water. Touching on Nuuanu dam he said that since January 1 the city had drawn three million gallons a day from the big reservoir, but yet at the present time it contained three hundred and fifty million gallons. Honolulu was saving $1000 a month on the cost of street-lighting from the power supplied, which was four per cent on the cost, being more than the interest on the bonded indebtedness on account of the work. There was power available from that source to pump an exclusively artesian water supply for household use, which would give Honolulu the purest water supply among all the cities of the world.

A. C. Lowrenz, the navy engineer in charge of the work at Pearl Harbor, explained that a navy yard was not in the category of fortifications. Wherever practicable a navy yard was located far enough inland to be out of range of bombardment from the sea. This not being the situation of Pearl Harbor navy yard forts were being provided to protect it. It would contain all sorts of workshops needed for repairing ships, together with a dry-dock and marine railway. The yard would probably not be a great repair station like that of New York, but its equipment would be sufficient to permit of expansion of capacity to meet almost any emergency.

Those present at the banquet were: Hon. Walter F. Frear, Col. Walter S. Schuyler, U. S. A.; Major Charles G. Lonn, U. S. M. C.; Mayor Jos. J. Fern; A. C. Lowrenz, U. S. A.; W. R. Farrington, R. O. THE "PULL" THAT PULLS.

Hundreds of young American men of good education, and as many with inferior education, are every year going out into the world to find work with no pull except the pull of their own willingness to work, and are finding it. They do not always find at first exactly what they would like most to find—sometimes they miss finding it altogether—but they find work of some sort, and we believe that there are not many cases in which they do not find their own true level.

That there are cases of "pull" is no doubt true. In a world like this there naturally would be. A man in business is normally inclined toward taking into his employ his son or his nephew, or the son of his friend, who asks an opportunity for the boy. Sometimes the venture goes well; sometimes it does not. Sometimes the young man shows marvelous aptitude for success, and not infrequently he shows marvelous aptitude for failure, and sooner or later has to give way to the man who had no friends to help him to his start. These things are happening every day—much more often than the case of the young man, moral, smart, industrious, who tramps the streets for months looking for work. After all, the most effective pull is the pull of the man's own efficiency.—New Bedford Standard.

GONE TO JURY.

In the case of the Territory v. Hammoaka and to others on a charge of having assisted in maintaining and conducting a lottery, on the application of Mr. Levin Andrews, who appeared to defend, three of the defendants were discharged, as insufficient evidence has been brought to show that they were connected with the game. Later on another one was discharged for the same reason. Shortly afterwards the jury retired to consider the verdict.
