EXCITEMENT ON THE SANTA RITA

The Santa Rita, an oil steamer, eight and a half days out of Port San Luis, made port yesterday afternoon. She comes here with 45,000 barrels of crude oil to the Union Oil Company. She is berthed at the railroad wharf, and it is expected that the whole of the oil will be pumped out by tomorrow afternoon, thus permitting her to leave again either tomorrow night or early Wednesday morning. She will then return to Port San Luis for orders.

Inquiries on board this morning developed the information that the trip down was an excellent one. It was fine throughout, and nothing unusual occurred to mar the trip. But stay—there was. Captain Boyd and some of his officers had a bath. Now this, on the face of it, does not seem extraordinary. But it was not the regular kind. A large swimming tank was fitted up, and in this the men would disport themselves during their spare time. Owing to the coldness on leaving the Coast, warm water was procured from the condenser—water that otherwise would have gone into the Pacific direct, but it was sent the same way via the water tank. One morning Captain Boyd and Chief Officer Jordan were swimming about enjoying themselves in a childish manner, when suddenly one of the tapes, or something gave way. The next thing was, the astonished crew saw several naked bodies struggling on the deck, and being hurled along by the heavy volume of water that had been let loose. The crew giggled as the Marathon of naked forms began hustling for their respective rooms. Captain Boyd was somewhat handicapped by the fact that he had the farthest to go in the daylight, for he had to scamper on the steps to the bridge deck to his room, and he was in full view the whole way.

Chief Officer Jordan has since had fitted up a fine spacious tank that can now be swum in. It is twenty-five feet long by fifteen wide, with a depth of water of about five feet. It is about as good as any on even the transpacific liners that call here.

Chief Officer Jordan is an ardent photographer, and he has an excellent snapshot of a big sea that hit the Santa Rita on one of her trips from here to the Coast. Judging by the volume of water over her deck, it would seem that she would never recover. The picture is a splendid one and has some wonderful details in it.

The search of the Korea on Saturday was productive of only a smoking outfit. The men kept hard at work until long after noon, but nothing further was found.

The patrol wagon outside the Customs House gave the suggestion that someone had been taken, but this was only one of the men removed off the China over a month ago, who had come to the Customs House for his clothing. He was due a change of clothing about that time, he thought, so he ordered up his carriage and was driven over to it.

The U. S. S. Thetis has been coaled again in preparation for her long trip to patrol the Bering Sea during the summer months. She leaves here tomorrow.
