MEXICAN HOSTILITY TO AMERICANS.

Hostility to Americans seems to be spreading in Mexico. Demonstrations against their persons and property here and there have warned the Americans of possible danger, and many of them are sending their families post haste across the lines. The hostility is the outgrowth of the feeling, now rather general, that Americans have been exploiting the country for their own advantage through the numerous concessions granted to foreigners by the Diaz Government. Francisco Madero has accentuated this feeling by declaring that "American monopolies must no longer receive special grants or to make excessive profits out of the people." It is true that these grants have been given to the English and the Germans as well as to Americans but our countrymen have been more prominent than others in work of developing Mexico, and must suffer more than the rest through the reversal of the Government practice and popular sentiment coming with the revolution.

Temporarily the overturn gives encouragement to the socialistic idea, which under Diaz was not allowed to express itself publicly in Mexico. The well-informed Socialists know that Madero is only another and milder Diaz, and that the change means little or nothing to the believers in the rights of capital. But ignorant men in every community look upon the success of the revolution as the beginning of a new era in which the downtrodden peon will at last come into his own. Hence demands that the wages be doubled or trebled. Hence rioting and attacks upon foreign property. Hence the growth of the fantastic notion that the street car men of Mexico City should no longer be compelled to wear uniforms or caps that all distinctions of class be abolished.

When Madero comes into control it will be necessary for him to use the iron hand in knocking all such notions out of the heads of the Mexicans. For a time he will become more unpopular than Diaz, and the future of his administration will rest entirely upon the strength as a ruler he is able to develop.—Nebraska State Journal.

BOY SCOUTS HEROES IN ILLINOIS

CHICAGO, July 30.—"Boy scouts to scouts are highly trained along the line of life saving and can always be relied upon to do the work of men."

This was the cry of three scores of Evanston youths yesterday when Louis Koraleski of Chicago flung his arms above his head and sank beneath the waters of Druce lake, ten miles west of Waukegan, Ill. Quick as they were, however, the treacherous water was quicker, and Koraleski was swept beyond earthly aid, but the boy scouts had proved the efficiency of their training and their ability to keep their heads at a time when many are prone to lose them. Today they are receiving the commendatory greetings of 800 or more persons who lined the banks of the little lake and witnessed the tragedy and the thrilling attempts at rescue.

Three Go Out For Swim.

Koraleski, who was twenty-three years of age and who had been married only a few weeks, went to Waukegan yesterday for an outing. He had two companions—one of them William Brown, who lives on a farm near the lake. The trio, to escape the fierce heat of the sun, planned a plunge in the cool water. Brown and the third member of the party jumped into a rowboat and rowed out to a spot where the water was deep. Koraleski swam easily along beside the boat.

Suddenly there was a shriek from the Chicagoan in the water, which was strangled in his throat as he tossed his arms above him and vanished beneath the surface. His horrified companions backed water and rowed frantically toward the spot where they had last seen Koraleski's head; shouting meanwhile, for aid. Their cries were heard by the little command of boy scouts, which had camped on the other side of the lake.

Youths Rush Out; Dive.

More than sixty of these youths leaped up and started to the rescue, some of them peeling their uniforms from their backs as they ran. They piled into every available boat on the beach and made the oars strain as they cut through the water. Those who could find no water craft to bear them plunged into the lake and swam after the others. The water was dotted with tiny boats and swiftly moving heads. In the foremost boat was P. C. Wercks, scoutmaster in charge of the encampment.

But Koraleski's body did not rise to the surface, and, seeing this, the boys dived for him, although the water where the man sank is said to be sixty feet deep. Again and again the youths unhesitatingly balanced for a moment in the boats and then plunged into the depths. For more than an hour their heroic efforts continued, but the search was in vain and, deeply downcast, they were obliged to desist.

Body Lost; Bride Prostrated.

The boys were heartily applauded for their efforts by the throng which lined the banks of the lake. Grappling hooks were taken to the lake today and further efforts are being made to recover Koraleski's body—a work in which the boy scouts are again lending a hand.

Koraleski's wife of a few weeks was not with him at the resort. She learned of his death at the home of her mother, where she is staying, at 1727 Clyburn avenue, and was prostrated by the tragic news.

Officers are Enthusiastic.

Officers of the Chicago division of the Boy Scouts of America were enthusiastic when they learned today of the showing made by their youthful troops. They explained that all of the scouts are highly trained along the line of life saving and can always be relied upon to do the work of men.

"The boys are well drilled in swimming and diving," said H. H. Simmons, field secretary of the Chicago body, "and are specially trained in saving water victims. They are taught to throw the life line, to bring a body to shore, to resuscitate a half drowned person and to break a death grip of the wrist and jaw. They usually bring drowning persons to shore on their backs."

Tells of Other Feats of Boys.

"It was just three weeks ago that our boys saved a thirteen year old lad from drowning in a swimming tank in Oak Park. They worked over him for ten minutes after he had been dragged from the water before life was restored. And also on the Fourth of July it was a squad of Hull House boy scouts who put out a disastrous blaze, started by fireworks, at Muskegon lake, where they were on a vacation. Assuredly the boys of Chicago and vicinity are having many adventures these days. But they are plucky fellows and can always be depended upon to perform their work like men."

D. W. Pollard, city secretary of the Chicago body, was also warm in his praise of the boys' heroic work.

CHICAGO'S PIANOS.

According to the Chicago Tribune, Chicago is now the largest piano producing center in the world, turning out annually more than 100,000 instruments, which are shipped all over the world. Manila alone within the past two years has taken over 1100 pianos. Mexico, until the present troubles overtook that republic, took more than 6000 pianos annually from Chicago, and Central and South America, especially the Argentine Republic, have been great consumers of Chicago pianos. Up to a few years ago Germany sent all the instruments that were shipped to these countries. But the German woods in the cases would not stand the climates. It was Milwaukee that first discovered this and sent trade emissaries to the far away lands. What holds good of the piano also holds good of band instruments. Chicago sells approximately 100,000 pianos a year, aggregating in value about $50,000,000, which is about one-third of the entire product of the nation.
