ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

Of all the supreme cruelties of obligation enacted in society, perhaps nothing can equal the physical and mental torture and rebellion aroused in the breast of a fair maiden when, chosen from a bevy of friends by a bride-elect, she is compelled to wear a frock which in color and design is more suitable for a dark one.

And the time has arrived when the protest, long slumbering, is no longer mute, but emphatic.

The obligations under which a young bride places her friends are imposing enough, but the impositions heaped upon the girls of her bridal cortege are unrivalled.

The honor of having chosen them from the list of her most cherished friends and relatives is hardly sufficient to compensate for the loss of sleep, the calls, the innumerable errands, the interminable assistance rendered for the preparation of the auspicious event, and the expense of a compulsory gown which, had these victims their way, might snuggle it to some poor family or relegate it to the flames of contempt and disappointment.

As the autumn draws nigh, with its preparations for golden-hued weddings, it would be well for prospective brides to consider well the color ensemble of their bridal train.

And although it is more pleasing to the eye to design the robes with an attempt at union, great tact should be employed by the designer in the introduction of accessories which might reconcile the difficult new French shades with more difficult complexions.

It is a common error of judgment for the bride when, in bestowing as a gift the gowns to the bridesmaids of her party, she undertakes the supervision of their construction and design.

And weddings as a whole would be more satisfactory if a trifle more of laxity were permitted in the ensemble for the more agreeable becomingness of the gowns to those who are compelled henceforth to wear them.

There is no bride in the world who would regard such an obligation, self-imposed as unlawful, none who would regard a compulsory attendance at any social function in an unbecoming gown otherwise than tragic!

And yet such an obligation is flippantly imposed upon those girls whom she has so greatly honored and so greatly humiliated by her selection!

Where the expenditure for a new frock is personally met, and when three or four weddings in succession, as in the case of sisters, demand entirely new creations, and when each creation is apt to average anywhere from one hundred and fifty to three hundred dollars, and when not one of those confections, designed and planned from opposing viewpoints by brides who primarily consider what is becoming to them—when not one of these confections meets with the least hint of approval of the wearer and not one is put on for future occasions without a flush of resentment, the imposition is fully manifested!

If a bride were less selfishly inclined, if she could be more lenient in her demands for personal sacrifice to fit the approval of her larger plans, then bridesmaids would more willingly be subjected to the privilege of preference and selection.

The fair, light shades are always safe and satisfactory, and seem to blend harmoniously equally with blonde and brunette.

But for the bride who is considerate to the feelings of her most cherished friends, a word to the wise is sufficient!

SOCIAL NEWS OF THE DAY.

Mrs. T. V. King and Mrs. Charles Rice of Kaula were the inspirations for a very charming garden party, at which Mrs. Thomas James King entertained yesterday afternoon at her home on Lunallo and Pikoit streets.

The grounds of this beautiful home are entrancing, with a sweep of lawn, over-shadowed by spreading and flowering trees which are now all in blossom, the Royal Poinciana in their scarlet clusters and whole blossoming boughs of the pink cassia Nodosa being very attractive.

Here and there over the lawn whole flower beds bloomed in a riot of colors, creating a fascinating setting for the society maids and matrons present in their dainty summer frocks, chapeaux and parasols.

Groups of garden chairs studded the lawn beneath the shade trees, where the elderly ladies gathered.

In a grove of coconut palms, bordered on all sides by flowering trees, the ladies of the receiving party stood, and here the arriving guests were greeted by their hostess, the two guests of honor assisted by Mrs. J. H. Soper, and Mrs. C. M. V. Forster, others assisting being Madame Kimball, Mrs. Clifford Kimball, Miss Helen Kimball, Miss Josephine Soper and Miss Blanche Soper.

During the afternoon, delicious light refreshments were passed by a corps of Japanese servants, consisting of ice cream, orange sherbert, cake and fruit punch, filigree silver baskets of salted almonds and bon bons being passed by the small son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Kimball and the two little daughters of Senator and Mrs. Charles Rice of Kaula, all grandchildren of Mrs. T. J. King.

The serving table for the refreshments was set on the broad lanai of the home overlooking the lawn, which was enclosed and draped with Hawaiian and American flags.

Among those present were Mrs. John Waterhouse, Mrs. Visger, Miss Pinder, Madame Hazelden, Mrs. E. W. Jordan, Miss Cordelia Walker, Miss Agnes Walker, Miss Margaret McIntyre, Miss Margaret Walker, Miss Kate McIntyre, Mrs. Charles Bryant Cooper, Mrs. E. M. Kelley, Mrs. Lishman, Miss Margaret Lishman, Mrs. Harry Gray, Mrs. Arthur T. Marx, Mrs. William Montrose Graham, Miss Geraldine Neumann, Miss Josephine Soper, Miss Blanche Soper, Mrs. T. V. King, Mrs. Charles Rice of Kaula, Mrs. Anna Wright, Mrs. J. H. Soper, Mrs. W. A. Kinney, Mrs. Paul Isenberg, Mrs. McGauley, Mrs. William Montrose Graham, Mrs. Elizabeth

Church, Mrs. Styne, Mrs. Charles Wilder, Mrs. Gardner Wilder, Mrs. Harry Wilder, Mrs. Gerrit P. Wilder, Mrs. George Harrison Lamberson, Miss Catherine Lamberson, Miss Edith Cowles, Mrs. Walter Cleveland Cowles, Mrs. Jules Luquens, Mrs. Charles Judd, Mrs. Agnes Judd, Mrs. Ernest Waterhouse, Mrs. Walter Francis Frear, Mrs. Eric Alfred Knudsen and others.

A number of very beautiful summer toilettes were seen during the afternoon.

Mrs. T. J. King wore a confection of steel peau de crepe draped and bordered by a heavy steel fringe, and a black lace picture hat trimmed with black ostrich plumes.

Mrs. T. V. King was very dainty in a white lace frock and wearing a Gainsborough chapeau of black, with sable plumes.

Mrs. Charles Rice wore a confection of blush pink lingerie elaborately embroidered in pink roses and a chapeau of pink maline encircled with a wreath of pink rosebuds.

Mrs. J. H. Soper was charming in white and lavender silk and wearing a toque to match and Mrs. Anna Wright, in new leaf green silk trimmed with self-tinted applique passementerie was very attractive.

Mrs. Styne wore a gown of black and a toque encircled with pansies. Miss Catherine Lamberson's frock of white Irish lace with touches of old rose and a white lace hat trimmed with shaded roses was very lovely.

Mrs. Arthur Marx wore a gown of white silk, and a chapeau whose brim was bound with turquoise velvet and whose crown was showered with light blue willow plumes.

Mrs. William Montrose Graham wore a simple but effective frock of pale pink and white lingerie, daintily embroidered and a chapeau of baby Irish lace wreathed with pink baby roses.

Miss Geraldine Neumann wore a gown fashioned of ecru net over a drop of maize silk, and a straw chapeau of parrot green, with a wide rolling brim and trimmed with cream colored roses.

Miss Josephine Soper and Miss Blanche Soper were exceedingly chic and pretty in pink and blue organdie gowns, respectively.

Mrs. E. M. Kelley was very attractive in a creation of mauve satin and a chic bonnet fashioned entirely of shaded violets.

Mrs. C. M. V. Forster wore a frock of Dutch blue and white marquisette, and a flower toque fashioned of forget-me-nots.

Madame Kimball wore a gown of pearl gray silk and a toque made of tinted gray roses.

Miss Helen Kimball and Mrs. Clifford Kimball looked very lovely.

The former wore a gown of white lingerie and a maize straw hat trimmed in a riot of summer flowers and foliage, pink, white and red roses blending harmoniously.

The latter wore a creation of black and white silk, with a large black satin picture hat trimmed with sable plumes.

Mrs. Frear was very dainty in heavily embroidered white silk crepe, wearing a long Oriental shawl cape with fringe and a Tam-o-Shanter hat of white lace trimmed with white willow plumes.

Mrs. Eric Alfred Knudsen of Kaula wore a stunning combination of champagne and black in her toilette. Her gown was of heavy pongee rep, with champagne silk hose and black velvet pumps and a large Romney hat of black velvet trimmed with a shower of willow plumes were worn.

Mrs. Gerrit P. Wilder seemed a Parisian old print come to life.

This charming matron wore a white lace frock, high waisted in design, and a Directoire sash in a blur of Dresden pink and lavender.

An old-fashioned bonnet fashioned entirely of pink and lavender roses completed this chic toilette.

Mrs. William Montrose Graham, who, with her son, Roy Montrose Graham, has been visiting for the past three weeks on Maui, has returned to town.

The trip was unusually attractive, visits being made to the extinct crater of Kilauea, Iao valley, Kahului, Wailuku, and Makawao, where Mrs. Graham and her son were guests of Miss Cooke.

Lieutenant Barrell entertained at an elaborate dinner party at the Hotel Colonial last evening in honor of Senator and Mrs. Eric Knudsen of Kaula. The dinner table was trimmed in the palest shade of pink, a large willow basket with duchess roses, through which glowed myriads of tiny pink electric bulbs, forming a centerpiece.

The roses were partly veiled by strands of tulle caught in a butterfly bow to the handle and clipped roses were strewn over the lace cloth.

The place cards, inscribed for fourteen, were in the royal coat of arms design, and after an elaborate menu, the evening was devoted to bridge.

Those invited to this dinner party were Senator and Mrs. Eric Alfred Knudsen, Senator and Mrs. Charles Rice, Dr. and Mrs. James Judd, Miss Blanche Dwinell of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Wilder, Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Waterhouse, Miss Harding and Mr. Lawrence Judd.

SAGACITY OF WOLVES.

In the school of woodcraft and knowledge of how to keep out of danger wolves have no four-footed equals. The fox is a dunce in comparison, the coyote—or prairie wolf—a fool, and the rest nowhere. The giant moose, king of the Canadian woods, is the most difficult of all the deer species to stalk in the fall months; but, nevertheless, it is often stalked successfully and shot by amateurs. Not so the wolf. Knowing this, and that true sport must combine a maximum of exertion and even danger to a minimum of destruction (though nothing would be said about the destruction of too many wolves), also that there was more honor to be gained in outwitting and shooting one wolf than a dozen easily stalked and innocent deer, the writer organized a wolf hunt for the winter of 1908-09, built three log cabins some miles apart and invited sportsmen to participate.

During the three midwinter months they came into camp in twos and threes for a week or ten days' hunt. To all of them the sport was new, healthful and exciting, not to say dangerous, considering the quarry sought and the risk of breaking through thin ice on lakes and rivers in its pursuit.

As soon as the first hunter arrived—in December—we shot several woodhares and ruffed grouse. These we placed at rocky points round the large lake infested with wolves, on which the cabins fronted. A couple of nights later a half score of wolves—judging by the way fur and feathers, legs and wings, and head and tails were scattered over a wide area of snow covered ice, punctuated in between with thousands of their footmarks—must have had a glorious scrimmage over these dainties; yet not a particle of either grouse or hare had been eaten. This subsequently repeated on several occasions, which goes to disprove the hitherto accepted statement that "wolves are always hungry"—at least, they are not here in Canada.—Wide World.
