

for the last two weeks before the public—it is difficult to comprehend how he, who was unknown in financial circles a year or two ago, could have succeeded in victimizing the note-shavers of Wall street, to the amount of some half a million of dollars. The mode by which he did so, we will try to explain.

The first trace that we can find of Mr. Huntington's connection with financial matters dates back only so far as 1852, when he and two or three other individuals fell into the hands of the police of this city, for the share which they had in getting up a fraudulent shipmaster concern under the title of "Anacostia Bank, of Washington, D. C." Indictments were found against him and his accomplices on that occasion, but they were never brought to trial, and as appears from an endorsement on the bill—of some informality or incompleteness in the proof.

We next find him, shortly thereafter, having a little box of an office in Wall street, where he purported to carry on the business of a bill broker in a small retail style. This business consists in acting as sort of agent or go-between for brokers on a large scale—that is, he would go to a broker and find out what he would sell certain notes for, and then he would go to another broker and ascertain what he would give for such notes, and then, if he found he could realize any profit by the transaction, he would buy from one broker and sell to another. He was heartily taken up with his wife on a modest scale. He agreed to pay $15 a week for their board, but even this moderate sum he did not, it is said, find it convenient to pay. He left that boarding house and went to the Metropolitan Hotel, where he stayed for some time; but he did not here indulge in any of the extravagancies into which he afterwards launched. He subsequently went to the New York Hotel, where it seems he commenced to be more liberal in his expenditures. We afterwards find him occupying part of a house in Fifteenth street, and recently owning two or three houses in Twenty-second street.

Nothing is more strange in connection with Huntington's career than the fact that he was a note broker known in Wall street or in commercial circles. Our reporter connected to-day with some of the principal brokers on the street; few of them had dealings with him, and most of them had never heard of him until the time of his arrest. And yet he could raise half a million of dollars among that confraternity on forged notes, wherein the signatures did not even pretend to be imitations.

The supposition is that it is only within the last eighteen months that Huntington commenced to operate on forged paper. It may not be very long. He had an office at No. 52 Wall street, and professed to carry on the legitimate business of a note broker. As most of our readers are in blissful ignorance of the business of note-shaving, we will briefly describe it. Commercial firms, even though they may have large capital, are constantly compelled to pay by notes on time instead of cash. The accommodation given by bankers is limited; and when they decline to make more advances on the notes of a firm, bill brokers are resorted to. These charge more or less discount on the bills, depending upon the credit of the drawer, and the length of time they may have to run before they mature. The bills of houses in first rate standing (technically known as gilt edge paper) will be discounted at the rate of ten or twelve per cent. per annum, while on others, not so well known or trusted, the brokers charge a discount of two or three per cent. per month. It follows, therefore, that in times of ordinary commercial prosperity, when bankruptcies are rare, these shavers make quite a handsome profit by their operations. Huntington was engaged in this capital business.

The profits of the trade, large as they must have been, did not satisfy him, or were insufficient to enable him to gratify his extravagant taste for fine horses, costly furniture, splendid equipages, fast coaches, and dashing women; so he resolved to try his hand on that branch of the profession which has conducted him to a cell in the Tombs. He went to work systematically, and used, at first, a good deal of caution to evade detection. He was in the habit of going to the office of a broker in high standing and purchasing from him notes of firms, sometimes to the amount of sixty or eighty thousand dollars in a week. For these he always paid in certified checks. He was an easy, dashing-looking fellow—said the broker who had always a cigar in his mouth, and was perfectly cool and nonchalant in his manner, so that he might very well impose on one; but there was something about him that I could not understand. I could not comprehend why he should come and buy our notes, as we did not divide the discount with him, and he could make nothing by them. He afterwards found out the secret of it. Huntington would buy these notes, duplicate them, sell the notes again, and use the duplicates as collateral security in raising money. At first, however, he used only the genuine notes, and, as they were always found to be correct, he gradually gained the confidence of those with whom he had dealings. When he had thus completely armed them all suspicion, he began to use the duplicates or forged notes. His plan was this—he would go into a note broker's say he wanted to borrow $40,000 for a month or so, for which he would give his own note of hand and certain other bills of such and such dates and amounts as collateral security, and he would leave a memorandum of these bills. If the broker wanted to satisfy himself that all was right, he would send to the firms purporting to be the drawers, and inquire whether they had out the notes described. They would refer to their books, find that they had issued such notes, and consequently the broker, not doubting that those offered by Huntington were the real ones, would advance the money asked upon them. With the money thus raised Huntington would make speculations, or would take up other bills becoming due, or would use it for his private purposes. And thus he went on from week to week and from month to month.

Escaping so often undetected, he began to relax in his exercise of caution. Instead of buying up genuine notes and duplicating them, he would sometimes go into a broker's, ask to look at his paper, run his eye over the amounts, dates and names of drawers, and would undertake, from memory alone, to duplicate such as he thought best fitted for his purpose. In this, however, he sometimes made a slip; for we find that Mr. Kane, a broker, with whom he had extensive dealings, detected him on two or three occasions in offering notes which he discovered to be forgeries. Why this gentleman did not then hand over the culprit into the hands of the law is a question which he will have some difficulty in answering to the satisfaction of the public. Another broker, holding a note which he suspected to be a forgery, would take the firm purporting to issue it, and although it was but a clumsy imitation of the genuine note, the party, without looking at it, and by merely referring to the bill-book, declared it to be all right. Is it any wonder that with such a loose way of doing business, frauds would be perpetrated? The only wonder is that they are not much more numerous.

The manner in which Huntington's operations were brought to light was no less curious than the operations themselves, and proved him, after all, to be rather careless and clumsy for a successful practitioner. Among a parcel of notes which he gave to Eiden & Co. as collateral security, in the usual manner, was one of Messrs. Phelps, Dodge & Co. for $5,000, which was then on its face over due. This fact attracted attention, and on inquiry being made it was pronounced a forgery. And even then Huntington would not have been brought to justice, but would have been allowed to go on ad infinitum, were it not for the firmness and determination of Mr. Dodge and his partner, Mr. Stokes. They sought out officer Bowyer, and obtained his advice and assistance in the matter; and although efforts were made to shield Huntington from the consequences of his acts, they proved futile. He was arrested and held to bail in $20,000. The very man on whom he attempted to pawn the counterfeit (Mr. Eiden) became his surety. Huntington had, previous to his arrest, procured $24,000 in gold on his own certified check, and this sum he lodged in Belden's hands as security, to induce him to become his bail. But the next day other evidence of forgeries came in, and he was re-arrested. Belden then procured the cancellation of his bail, and it is said retains the $24,000.

Another curious feature in the transaction is, that although the total amount of forgeries already ascertained is $545,142, no person can be found to acknowledge that he has been victimized. It is the opinion of experienced brokers that none of the forged paper was put upon the market, (in fact it was too clumsily imitated for that purpose,) but that it is in the hands of banks and brokers with whom he did business. He probably, however, did not raise more than $300,000 on it. We understand that a cashier of one of the banks was in the habit of making Huntington advances out of the drawer on this forged paper, receiving a large discount for it, and was fortunate enough to escape loss, and that, on hearing of Huntington's arrest, he went to the President of the bank, gave in his resignation, told what he had been doing, acknowledged that he had made large profits thereby, and said that he thought it his duty to let them know how easily they might be cheated in that way.

And now Huntington is in the Tombs. His trial will make work for the lawyers, and attract a good deal of public attention. It will probably be a nice legal point whether the lodging these notes as collateral security is tantamount to uttering them. The penalty for each offense may be seven years in the State Prison, and if convicted on all, he would require to live as long as old Parr to serve out his term. In the meantime he seems to be quite indifferent to his situation. When officer Bowyer informed him that he came to arrest him, he simply walked to the mantel-piece, took up a match, lit the cigar he had in his mouth, and walked out with the officer in apparent unconcern. His cell at the Tombs is richly carpeted and furnished. His wife's carriage drives down daily, and her care provides him with sumptuous meals, some fashionable ladies. At the same time he has his champagne and his Havanas, and don't seem to let the degradation of his position weigh upon his spirits. As an instance of his extravagance, even now, it is said that, after dining a day or two ago, he sent up to Thompson's for fruit, and paid as high as five dollars for five pears.

It will be asked what has become of the proceeds of these extreme forgeries? We have given an inkling of the extravagance of this man, which sufficiently indicates his character in that respect, and we have no doubt that within the last two years he has been able to squander all the money that he raised by the means we have described. He owned two houses in Twenty-second street, costing probably some $25,000. These he furnished with furniture of expense. In one of them he resided with his family; in the other, not a block distant, he maintained in grand style a lady of beauty and accomplishments, who was not his wedded wife. He was fond of showy equipages and fine horses, and outshone all his competitors in that line.

It was usual to see his lady driving two in hand, and himself driving a similar team, side by side. He kept open house for all his friends, and gave them the use of his whole establishment. He rarely dined at home, but generally at some of the fashionable restaurants, with some fashionable ladies. At the watering places his lady outshone all others in the splendor of her diamonds. It is said that on the very day of his arrest she had sent to his office, from Niagara or Saratoga, a box containing $30,000 worth of jewelry. Her brother took it in charge, and the officers have not since been able to get at it. We received the other day a communication stating that he had recently bought, at Tiffany & Co.'s, a piece of jewelry, price $1,800, for presentation to a lady. Mr. Tiffany, however, says that this and other similar statements are exaggerated.

With such lavish expenditures as these extravagant tastes and habits imply, it need not be wondered what became of the proceeds of the forgeries.

Huntington, like many other persons in New York, was determined to live like a prince—no matter who had eventually to foot the bill. Even now, when the crash that was to be expected has come, and when he can reasonably look for no other fate than that of a felon, he does not lose his recklessness or indifference. He eats his fine dinners and drinks his costly wines in his little cell in the Tombs with apparently as much gusto as when he played the part of grand seigneur in Twenty-second street; and even there, the calamity that has befallen the household does not seem to press heavily upon them. There is the same sound of revelry by night, as in the times when he was flourishing in Wall street. But the reaction cannot fail to come after the giddy excitement of such a life. It is sad to contemplate the end of such a brief career of dissipation. The wealth which his wife supposed to be inexhaustible will not save him from the degradation of a convict's life. A young man of good address and pleasing manners, he might have had a life of usefulness, and honestly become wealthy as he desired; but he could not resist the temptation of getting rich in a hurry, and the end will be a miserable existence in Sing Sing prison. There is a moral in Huntington's career for all classes of our citizens.

AMUSEMENTS.

THEATER.—Full houses have been the order of the day at the Theater during the past week, and the performances have been of a character to please the most fastidious. On Tuesday night, Mr. Lloyd, a hard-working and clever actor, was tendered a complimentary benefit, on which occasion there was an overflowing house. A good bill is offered for to-night.

ROWE & CO.'S PIONEER CIRCUS.—There is no falling off in the attraction presented nightly by the enterprising managers of this popular place of amusement. That jolly old nigger, John Smith, is there every night, and brings "down the house" with his quick sayings and doings. To-night J. F. A. Pickering has a benefit, and to-morrow night Mr. William Franklin, the most daring and graceful of riders, presents his name to the people of Honolulu for a benefit; doubtless, he will have a full house, as he is fully deserving of one. We understand that many of our citizens propose tendering a complimentary benefit to Mr. J. A. Rowe the coming week. Do it well, gentlemen and ladies, or not at all.

P. C. DECORRON.

NOTICE.—My husband having thought fit to oblige a most unfeeling notice on the public, in the last number of the Commercial Advertiser, to the effect that he would not be responsible for any debts (exceeding ten dollars) contracted on account of himself or family, and also cautioning parties by buying property to which he may lay claim, I feel reluctantly compelled, in justice to myself, to state that, inasmuch as I have, for the last year, succeeded in earning a respectable support for myself and two children, without his aid, it is not my intention, nor do I need to contract any debts on his credit, (were such practice) nor I have the means, resources which he has hitherto sustained me, and which I can make available for my future support, unless marred by his unwelcome and unprofitable interference, in appropriating to his private uses my hard earnings.

Proprietor, Merchant Street, Honolulu, thankful for the liberal patronage hitherto enjoyed, continues to solicit the attention of his friends and the public in general to this establishment. Neither pains nor expense has been spared to make this house a desirable place of resort to the resident or visitor in Honolulu. The bar is continually stocked with the choicest wines, liquors, etc., and persons are not required to wait for the immediate charge of Mr. Randall Smith, so long and favorably known in this community.
The billiard saloon is unsurpassed by any in the place, and is under the sole charge of Mr. A. J. McNeill, whose present popularity is sufficient guarantee of his future success in catering to this particular department for the amusement of those who may favor the house with their patronage.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1856.

NEWSPAPERS.—Throughout the United States will render a service, in our opinion, to our country, by publishing in the Pacific region, by giving conspicuous place to the subjoined circular in their respective columns.

JOHN B. WELLES,
Senate of the U. S., from California.
J. W. DENVER,
House of Rep. U. S., from California.
P. T. HERBERT,
House of Rep. U. S., from California.
JOSEPH LANE,
Del. from Oregon, H. R. U. S.
W. PATON ANDERSON,
Del. from Washington Territory, H. R. U. S.

To persons mailing Letters for California and the Territories of Washington and Oregon.—Thousands of letters sent to the Pacific coast, become dead letters. To remedy this evil the Pacific Mail Company, authorized by the Congress, has adopted as an auxiliary to its operations the following plan: simultaneously publishing at each and every post office in the Pacific region, in a list called "Pacific Mail List," the names of persons to whom letters addressed to California or the Territories of Oregon and Washington; if the letter is published in the Pacific Mail List, its ultimate reception by the person for whom it is intended will be rendered highly probable. To enable those who may desire to extend to their Pacific correspondents the advantages thus offered, the following illustration is given:

Suppose it is wished to send to the Sacramento post office a letter to George Wilson, who emigrated to California from Pike county, Missouri, but it is feared that he may have changed his location, and hence may not receive the letter. In this case, direct the letter to George Wilson, (state of Pike county, Missouri) Sacramento, California. Then in order to publish the letter in the Pacific Mail List, copy the address of the letter upon a piece of paper or card, and enclose the card, together with a three-cent postage stamp, in an envelope to the Pacific Mail List, N. Y. Deposit the letter, as usual, in the mail for California, and at the same time drop the envelope, containing the card to publish the letter, in the mail for New York. From the address on the card thus received at the New York post office the name, George Wilson, will be entered in its appropriate place in the Pacific Mail List, which is printed and sent by mail to each and every post office in California, Oregon and Washington, and by them posted in a conspicuous place in their respective offices. The list thus being distributed, the letter to George Wilson, (state of Pike county, Missouri) Sacramento, California, will be sent to the Sacramento post office, from which a letter for him has been sent to the Sacramento post office. No person of a similar name will receive the letter, the address on it points out the person intended for George Wilson, late Pike county, Missouri. Thus many letters will be received that would otherwise be transmitted to the dead-letter office.

The envelopes containing the advertising cards sent to the Pacific Mail List, New York, pay postage like ordinary mail matter, and must be pre-paid. The addresses of letters copied on the pieces of paper or cards should be written in a plain and distinct manner. The three-cent postage stamp enclosed in the envelope defrays the expenses of publication, and must not be pasted to the cards, but simply enclosed with them. In the absence of postage stamps, three-cent coins may be substituted.

It is believed that this circular has been drawn up so explicitly as to require no explanation; but should this prove not to be the case, postmasters will take notice that all interrogatories must be addressed to the Pacific Mail List, New York, and not to the department.

The first of this series of lists will accompany the mail of May 5th, and will be forwarded by each succeeding mail.

OLIVER E WOODS,
Post Office Department, March 5, 1856.

Mr. Woods has my authority to put his plan, as above, in operation; but no responsibility is assumed by the department; and all correspondence in regard to this arrangement must be addressed to the Pacific Mail List, New York. That the public may avail itself of the advantages thus offered, postmasters are requested to give the circular a conspicuous place in their respective offices.
