SUPREME COURT—Oct. Term, 1864.

J. H. CORDING and J. WILSON, vs. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

Justice Robertson delivered the decision of the Court, as follows:

This is an amicable suit, submitted to the decision of the Court upon an agreed statement of facts under the provisions of Section 1140 of the Civil Code, for the purpose of determining the claims of Messrs. Cording & Wilson, to have a sugar mill and two centrifugal machines entered inwards, at the Custom House, free of duty. It appears that the sugar mill and machines in question arrived at Honolulu, in the month of August, 1863, on board the schooner Dominia, imported by, or for any agriculturalist, or body of agriculturalists, for his or their especial use. It is admitted on the part of the Government, that Cording & Wilson are agriculturalists, within the meaning of the statute; and it is argued on their behalf that they are the importers of the machinery in question, and therefore entitled to enter the same duty free. It is contended by the Collector-General of Customs, that the mill and machines in question, were imported under the provisions of Section 517 of the Civil Code, but the said application was refused, under instructions from the Minister of Finance.

That part of the 117th Section of the Civil Code, which provides that the importation of goods, in instances like the present, is divisible into three separate stages or acts, viz: the bringing of the goods from a foreign country to this; the landing of the goods and placing them in bond; and the entry of the goods, inwards, for use or consumption in this Kingdom. It is argued, therefore, that in such cases, the importation is not complete, nor the goods subject to the payment of import duty, till the third or last stage, namely, the entry inwards for use or consumption in this country. In support of this point, counsel has referred to the opinion given by Justice Robertson, on behalf of the Judges, in the case of D. L. Gregg, late Minister of Finance, on the 23d June, 1859, upon certain questions which arose out of the ratification of the new Treaty with France.

One of the questions put to the Judges, by the Minister of Finance, on that occasion, was this: When the 10th Article of the French Treaty, or the new Treaty of 1859, goes into effect, will bonded spirits and wines, or other goods, previously imported, be legally subjected to the old or new rates of duty? The answer given to this question, was, in substance, that the importer, by his bond, undertakes to pay only the duties to which the goods are liable at the time they are withdrawn from bond; that so long as goods remain in bond, they have not yet become absolutely liable to the payment of any import duty; that the goods may be reshipped out of the Kingdom, without the payment of any duty; and that, therefore, the importation of goods for home consumption, may, so far as the law regulating the payment of import duties is concerned, be regarded as still incomplete while the goods remain in bond.

But that opinion does not cover the questions raised by the case now before us. It is argued, therefore, that the question here is not, when shall the importation of goods, for home use or consumption, be regarded as complete? Under the 517th Section of the Civil Code, there are two questions raised by the present case, viz: first, who must be regarded in the eye of the law, as the importer of the goods in question, and secondly, and thirdly, are those articles liable to duty, or may they be entered free? In this case, the decision of the first question carries with it the decision of the second, also; because if the importer is an agriculturalist, or body of agriculturalists, and have imported the articles for his or their especial use, the articles should be entered free.

There are, speaking generally, three parties, either of whom may be regarded as the importer of goods, in contemplation of law: First, a person residing in this Kingdom who orders or purchases the goods abroad on his own account, and to whom they are consigned here; secondly, a person residing in this Kingdom, to whom goods are consigned by the owner abroad, for sale or otherwise; thirdly, a person who comes here with goods from abroad, of which he is the owner or to whose order they are consigned, and who enters them at the Custom House.

Now, it is apparent that Cording & Wilson do not answer to either of these parties. The articles in question were consigned by the foreign owner to Janion, Green & Co., for sale, and they entered the articles at the Custom House, and placed them in bond to wait for a purchaser. Janion, Green & Co. are, therefore, the importers, within the meaning of the law, and Cording & Wilson are merely purchasers in bond from the importers. The fact that Cording & Wilson assumed the liability for duties, in addition to the price of the articles, does not make them the importers within any recognized acceptance of that term; and they cannot legally claim to have the articles entered duty free.

It may be true, as stated by counsel, that the Diplomatic Representatives of foreign nations have been permitted to enter, free of duty, goods purchased by them, here, in bond, for their own use; and that a similar privilege has been allowed to the Hawaiian Steam Navigation Company, in the article of coal; but the fact that a lax administration of the law may have obtained in a few instances, affords no guide to the Court. It is our duty, when called upon to decide judicially, to decide according to what we believe to be the proper construction of the statute. It should be observed that the foreign Representatives may expect their privilege to be regulated by international comity, and not by the statute. We order, accordingly, that judgment be entered, in favor of the defendant, as of the last day of the October term.

Honolulu, 28th October, 1864.
Mr. Montgomery, for the Plaintiffs.
The Attorney-General, for the Government.
