SATURDAY, MAY 19,
THE EASTERN WAR REGION.
The Government of the Sultan—A Few Words on Turkey.

Turkey, or the Ottoman Empire, includes large portions of the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa, and consists of Turkey Proper, which is under the direct rule of the Sultan, and of numerous dependent and tributary States, governed by their own Princes. Turkey Proper is partly in Europe and partly in Asia, and is divided into a number of provinces, or eyalats.

The total area of the Empire comprises 1,812,- 044 square miles, divided as follows:

Turkey in Europe.....	207,439	1,800,000
Turkey in Asia.....	960,000	600,000
Turkey in Africa.....	842,740	600,000
Total.....	1,812,044	2,700,000

The States dependent upon Turkey are either subject to hereditary chiefs—as Egypt, Serbia, and Montenegro—or elector. In the latter case they are appointed by the Sultan, must acknowledge his sovereignty, and pay tribute; in all other respects they are on the footing of independent rule.

Turkey Proper, as the immediate possessions of the Sultan are called, is bounded by the Austrian dominions, Roumania, and the Black sea on the north; by Persia, the Persian gulf, and the Red sea on the east; and by the Red sea and its outlet, Egypt, the Mediterranean Greece, the Adriatic sea, and the Austrian Empire on the south and west.

Turkey in Europe, the smaller of the two divisions of Turkey Proper, is generally hilly and undulating, traversed by a mountain system which has its origin in the Alps, whose eastern extension, the Julian Alps, enters the country at its northwest corner, runs in a southwest direction as the Dinaric, also keeping parallel with the coast line, and after entering Albania, where it becomes Mount Pindus, assumes an almost southerly direction till it reaches the Greek frontier. This range, which forms the water-shed between the Adriatic and Egean seas, has its culminating point in Mount Dinara (7,458 feet), and sends out numerous offshoots over Montenegro and Albania.

The great river of Turkey is the Danube, which, with its tributary, the Save, forms the northern boundary, and receives in Turkey the Bosna and Drina from Bosnia, the Morava from Serbia, and the Iska and Osmia from Bulgaria.
The Maritza whose basin is formed by the great Balkan and its two southeastern branches—the Struma and Vardar, in Macedonia, are also considerable rivers, but those which are situated to the west of the Dinaric Pindus range are, in general, insignificant in size.

On the highlands the cold is excessive in winter, owing to the northeast winds, which blow from the Black and icy steppes of Southern Russia, and the best in summer is almost irresponsive in the western valleys. Violent climatic change is, on the whole, the rule in European Turkey; but those districts which are sheltered from the cold winds, as the Albanian valley, enjoy a comparatively equable temperature. Although the soil is for the most part very fertile, but little progress has been made in the art of agriculture, and the most primitive implements are in common use.

The cultivated products are maize in the south; rice, cotton, rye, barley in the center, and millet in the north; the natural products are the pine, beech, oak, linden and ash, with the apple, pear, cherry, and apricot in the Danube basin; the plum, maple, almond, sycamore, walnut, chestnut, carob, box, myrtle, laurel, etc., in the provinces south of the Balkan; large forests of fir and pine in the northwest; the olive, orange, citron, vine, peach, plum and other fruit trees in Albania; and abundance of roses in the valley of the Maritza. The mineral products are in abundance, argentiferous lead-ore, copper, sulphur, salt, alum, and a little gold, but no coal. The wild animals are the wild boar, bear, wolf, wild dog, civet, chamois, and fox, and in some others which are generally distributed in Europe. The lion was formerly an inhabitant of the Thessalian Mountains.

This portion of the Turkish Empire is more hilly than the other; the two almost parallel ranges, Taurus and Anti-Taurus, which are the basis of its mountain system, cover almost the whole of the peninsula of Asia Minor or Anatolia, with their ramifications and offshoots forming the surface into elevated plateaus, deep valleys and inclines. In the north, the whole chain the Lebanon range proceeds southward parallel to the coast of Syria, and diminishing in elevation in Palestine, terminates on the Red sea coast at Sinai. Besides the Euphrates, Tigris, Orontes, the only important rivers of Turkey in Asia are the Kizil Frank, which rises on the borders of Cilicia, and after a devious course across the peninsula, falls into the Black sea near Samoun; the Mander and Sarabat, which flow to the Egean sea, and the Sakaria, which empties itself into the Euxine. On the whole, Turkey in Asia is ill supplied with water; and though the mountain slopes afford abundance of excellent pasture, the plains and many of the valleys, especially those of the Tigris, Tigris and Jordan, are reduced by the parching droughts of summer to the condition of sandy deserts.

The fertile portions produce abundance of wheat, barley, rice, maize, tobacco, hemp, flax, and cotton; the cedar, cypress, and evergreen oak flourish on the mountain slopes; the sycamore and mulberry on the lower hills; and the olive, fig, citron, orange, pomegranate and vine on the low lands. The mineral products are iron, copper, lead, alum, silver, rock salt, coal (in Syria), and lime-stone. The fauna includes the lion (east of the Euphrates), the hyena, lynx, panther, leopard, buffalo, wild bear, wild ass, bear, wolf, jackal, ferret, and many others; the camel and dromedary increase the ordinary list of domestic animals. Notwithstanding the primitive state of agriculture in Turkey, the extreme fertility of the soil, the rapidity with which the fields to one hundred fold, and the ample amends for this defect, and supplies materials for the comparatively unimportant manufactures and industries of the country. The products are wax, raisins, dried figs, olive oil, silks, red wool, dressed goat skins, excellent carpets, car-petry, dyestuffs, embroidery, essential oils, attar of roses, plum brandy, etc. The commerce of Turkey is extensive and important, and under the influence of the Indian regulations is rapidly increasing. Detailed statistics are not obtainable.
The average annual value of the imports of Turkey in Europe are estimated at $92,500,000; and the exports at $60,000,000. The exports are the surplus of the above-mentioned, and other manufactured products of the country, also wool, goats' hair, meerschaum clay, honey, sponges, drugs, madder, gall-nuts, various gums, and resins and excellent wines; the imports are manufactured goods of all kinds—glass, pottery, arms, paper, cutlery, steel, amber, etc.

The merchant marine included, in 1873, 224 sailing vessels of a total burden of 34,711 tons, and 12 steamers, aggregating 3,049 tons. The total tonnage of the merchant marine is estimated at 180,000.

The sovereign is commonly styled Sultan, but has also the titles Padi-Shah, Grand Seigneur, Khan and Hunkar, though nominally absolute, his power is limited by the Sheikh-ul-Islam, the Chief of the Ulemas, who has the power of objecting to any of the Sultan's decrees, and frequently possesses more authority over the people than his sovereign. The supreme head of the administration and rank next to the Sultan, is the Grand Vizier (Sadri-Azam), under whom are the members of the Cabinet or Divan (Menshy-Divani), namely, the Presidents of the Supreme Council of State (Akkami-Adle), and of the Janissary, the Seraskier, the Capudan Pasha, or High-Admiral, and the other heads of the department of the administration. The Governor of the eyalats, or provinces, are styled Walis, each eyalet, is divided into sanjaks or livas, ruled by Kaimaks, each liva containing a number of kazas, or districts, and each kaza number of nahiyehs, composed of villages and hamlets.

According to the budget for 1875-6 (the year 1291, according to the Turkish calendar), the estimated public revenue was 4,775,288 piastres of 500 piastres each; the expenditure, 5,785,- 819 piastres. The foreign debt of Turkey amounted in 1875 to $924,908,900; the internal and floating debt has been estimated variously at from $65,000,000 to $150,000,- 000.

The military forces of Turkey were in 1875 officially estimated as follows: On a peace footing, 157,667 men; on a war footing, 286,- 100.

The navy consisted at the end of 1875 of 29 ironclad ships and 70 other steamers. In addition to these there were 4 steam transports and a number of old sailing vessels not fit for service. The total length of railways open for traffic on January 1, 1875, was 825 English miles, of which 654 were in Europe and 171 in Asia. The length of telegraph lines on the 1st of January, 1875, was 17,597 miles. The total number of dispatches carried in the year 1874 was 910,130 of which number 102,987 were international messages.

Education was long neglected, but in 1874 a new system was introduced; and since then schools for elementary instruction have been established throughout Turkey, and middle schools for higher education and colleges for the teaching of medicine, agriculture, naval and military science, etc. In 1870, Constantinople had 415 public schools, which were attended by 24,000 pupils.
