Which One? One of us, dear— But one— Will sit by a bed with marvellous fear—

And clasp a hand that trembles with delight— Growing cold as it feels for the spirit land—

Darling, which one? One of us, dear— But one— Will stand by the other's coffin bier—

And look and weep, While those marble lips strange silence keep—

Darling, which one? One of us, dear— But one— By an open grave will drop a tear—

And homeward go, The anguish of an unshared grief to know—

Darling, which one? One of us, dear— But one— It may be that you will slip from me;—

Or perhaps my life may first be done;— Which one?

Blood and Iron. From Punch. SPANISH BISMARCK'S ANNIVERSARY.

How hath colossal Bismarck's brain Improved those twenty years.

And turned to German growth and gain Men's feebleness and fears!

How stately he builds his plots, How neatly spread his toils.

From clasp of wit or crush of shots Brings home the victor's spoils.

Great churl of genius, brutal brawn, Great fiend, his ruthless might With blood and iron dims the dawn

Of sweetest and of light. Ah, yet, in strenuous strength and skill, We may not Bismarck to;—

Our world hath blood-lilyed labors still For iron souls to do.

Children's Books. It is not sufficiently realized by those who have the responsibility of the care and education of children how much the character is determined by what the children and young people read.

In books will be found beautiful mental and moral food, unsatisfying and useless stuff, and deadly poison—the poison being usually destructive in proportion as it is made attractive.

Our children are kept from the store-houses of rich food, from the flowery fields of sweetest poetry, from the scenes of thrilling romance and noble adventure, from contact with great souls of past and present time, simply through the ignorance and carelessness of their parents and teachers, who seem to think that a giddy girl or impetuous youth is being kept out of mischief if the attention is absorbed in a book.

The vast multitude of silent companions entering our homes day by day must have our careful scrutiny, or they may put out the light of our households. We forbid our children to associate with other children who are vicious and ill-mannered. We are bound to exercise equal care in the choice of these companions, and to choose for them books and people.

And must see to it that the things which they know to be "true, because the book says so," are true, pure, honest and of good report.

There never was a time when it was so easy to obtain a comparatively small cost the best reading for children and young people. Fathers and mothers and teachers should not be satisfied with the Sunday School and circulating library. The Sunday School books are charming volumes, but children has not made religion easy for the little folks. These religious novelettes, developed during the last century, have not improved in character in our day. The religious novel, on a larger plan, with few exceptions, has proved a failure. The field of fiction allotted to the charming volumes of the Nursery Rhymes first of all. We would have them led on to the Arabian Nights, to know Robinson Crusoe and the Swiss Family Robinson. They should soon become familiar with Hans Christian Andersen and the Brothers Grimm, with Hawthorne's Twice-Told Tales, with the real boys and girls of Miss Alcott, and the noxious poison, with Tom Brown's School Days, and led finally to a love for Scott's novels, for Cooper and Thackeray and Dickens. We would have them become familiar with the pictures of real life in the Book of Books—not from "Bible Stories" or the "Bible Made Easy," but from the unbridled volumes of Joseph, of Samuel, and David; of the Holy Child, the God-man Christ Jesus, and the labors of the great St. Paul. There are charming books on natural history, of biography and travel; books on games, amusements, "funning" and fishing. There are readable serials, such as Kingston's Boys' Annual, Harpers' Young People, and leading them all as the finest juvenile serial in any tongue. St. Nicholas' Magazine. The children of the last generation had not access to such a wealth of old and new reading for children and youth. These most wholesome companions come to us by every mail. They gladden in gold and color on the counter and shelf of the book-seller. They have in them springs of unbounded happiness for some of our young people. They are better than those expensive toys and vanishing confectionery. Would it not be some exercise to search our houses and find out what our boys and girls are actually reading? It would be a good investment, many a heart ache, if the rubbish of the dime-novel order, the Oliver Optic tribe, the sensational chaff and the noxious poison were removed. It will pay to put up in each boy's or girl's room a neat shelf and fill it with wholesome mental food "such as the soul loveth."

Children's books are more than ever attractive this year, and our book-sellers deserve high praise for putting so many of them within our reach.

Geo. Wallace. Honolulu, Christmas Holidays, 1882.

To remove ink stains from printed books, procure a pennyworth of oxalic acid, which dissolve in a small quantity of warm water; then slightly wet the stain with it, when it will disappear, leaving the leaf unharmed.

A Nebraska man, describing oysters in the shell, said "They're an inside-out sort of thing, and the piss are the best part of them."
