All inquiries will be satisfactorily answered by any who may be interested.

A Caucus Meeting of the "Ded. its Party."

Mr. Eborow: It was my privilege a few days ago to be present at a meeting of the "opposition party," held for the purpose of considering the political situation. The meeting opened by electing Bro. Early Party Chairman, and Bro. Kuma Kula Secretary. As near as I could perceive, the first meeting of the new party was composed entirely of people connected with the different newspapers here. As soon as the meeting had elected officers, Bro. Early offered up a short and most fervent prayer, in which he instructed the Lord that it was clearly his bounden duty to look down upon them and bless them, and grant them all their desires, and also to confound and bring to naught all the plots of their enemies, good, bad or indifferent. At the conclusion of this short and appropriate appeal all present responded with a most earnest "Amen."

The chairman then proceeded to state the object of the meetings follows: "Brethren, when the forefathers had been a few years in Plymouth it is reported that they held a meeting and, resolved first, 'The earth is the Lord's and his peoples' Second, Resolved, We are his people. After this, possession of everything in the land—the object of their desires—became easy and convenient. Now, as you well know brethren, for about half a century, the party of which we are the shining lights and exponents have held full tenure and possession of all offices of honor, profit or trust, by much the same arguments and reasons as the forefathers held possession of Plymouth colony. But unfortunately within the last few years a change has come about: Certain detectable "new comers" have made their appearance, and have not only directed to political office, but, a curse be on them, have actually succeeded in securing control of the government in such a way, that we are entirely left out in the cold."

Now brethren, it must be plain to all of you without any argument that this matter has been allowed to run on altogether too far. Something must be done, and that right speedily to remedy this condition of affairs.

As you well know brethren, I am a most earnest and devoted follower of the Lord. I am also a full and earnest believer in the truths and precepts of revealed religion. However, there are certain maxims enunciated in the good book which I have for the good of our party. Taken upon myself for the time being to entitle myself, especially that to the time of four hundred sovereigns a year is a feeling that counts," (visible effect among the members.) To think that I should be so easily swayed by such people as compose this Government, especially after such honor as I formerly enjoyed at the hands of one of the mighty potentates of Europe. To see the brilliancy of that circle, graced by the hands of the mighty autocrat of all the Russias, treated with so little respect, is entirely too much."

Here he was suddenly overcome for a short while. Proceeding shortly, he said: "Upon the subject of leprosy, I think this meeting will fully agree with me that I played no inferior part to brother Pesty. In fact, I furnished facts and figures which confuted even my own mighty intellect. Upon this I propose to enlarge at our next meeting. As I feel at present somewhat tired, I will not prolong my remarks except to say that I hope our party, which I have definitely announced, will remember what I have gone through for the good of the cause, and when the new fact, for which we are all so earnestly sighing, comes around, to remember me when this you see."

The next to address the political love feast was a disdained looking youth, with a far away look in his eyes. In his left hand he carried a note book and in his right a lead pencil, while about his general appearance something considerably suggested to an observer's mind the thought that this person was always looking for something fresh. After addressing the chair he spoke as follows: "I am not like the two brothers who have already spoken. I feel disposed to give everyone their just due. While there is just cause for complaint in many things here, and I have felt called upon for some severe strictures upon this government, in some cases indulging in flings at various ones, still I feel that the brethren who have said their say, have in many cases gone too far. I have heard it boldly stated that much of the love of scandal mongering and backbiting and general abomination, in fact that the construction of this hall, where we hold our meetings, known as Social Scandal Hall has been brought about by the newspapers presided over by the two gentlemen who have spoken here to-night." Here he was wildly interrupted by the chairman with cries of "me! me! me!!!" and the secretary's shout of "what! what! what! who do you mean sir!!"

The next instant the president's lower jaw was seen to fall, even his usual string of philippines failed and murmuring, "and this of one of the Lord's people!!" he sank to the floor in a dead faint.

Fortunately at this juncture the "ablest non-professional medical writer" rushed forward and proceeded to pour forth all the skill for which he is so justly celebrated. From out of a capacious pocket he produced a quart black bottle, and removed the cork with his teeth, during which operation some of the medicine contained in the bottle escaped down his own throat.

Disregarding this however, he proceeded to force the neck of the vial between the teeth of the prostrate man and poured some of its contents into his mouth. This brought on a serious choking fit, but, however, restored the fainting man to consciousness. He spat out what he seemed to regard as an objectionable fluid, cast a withering look at his mediciner, and faintly called for "water." At this the wild-eyed young man rushed frantically for the tap in the corner, and finding no water, departed in haste for his own sanctum, to compose an editorial on the wickedness of a Government which failed to secure an acceptable rain-fall or tolerate a drizzle.

Finding the meeting broken up without any formality, one after another departed, brother Early being led off, on the arm of a young one with hair and complexion of the tint of your tropical sunsets. Yours truly,
