

$8.50 $8.50

$8.50

For a handsome all-Wool Cassimere Suit. Good workmanship, style, fashion and finish. For this week only. Don't let this opportunity go by.

ORIGINAL EAGLE

5 and 7 W. Washington St.

$8.50 $8.50

TRAVELERS' INDEX.

KANKAKEE LINE

WE ARE THE CHICAGO LINE, AND WE CAN PROVE IT.

J. H. Martin... Sit—Yours of the 10th ult. received. Please allow me to tender my sincerest thanks for your trouble in securing the chair for my mother.

While every one seems to be going to Chicago, and it devolves upon the Passenger Agent of this line to undertake, in his weak way, to see before the public the superiority of the Kankakee Line over its competitors.

Our special Chicago trains: Saturday, 19th, 2 trains... Sunday, 20th, 2 trains... Monday, 21st, 4 trains...

TIME CARD. CENTRAL DIVISION. Depart... Arrive... CINCINNATI DIVISION—SUNDAY TRAINS.

Chicago Division. Depart... Arrive... Pullman palace cars, elegant reclining chairs, and parlor cars between Indianapolis, Chicago and Cincinnati.

WHEN INDICATIONS. FRIDAY—Slightly warmer, occasional light local rains.

The Gas-Workers

Can find here every grade and kind of overalls, pants and jacket that they wish, and regular clothes likewise.

A good Jeans Pants, 50c to $2. All-Wool Men's Pants, $2 to $9. A Seersucker Coat and Vest, $1.25.

The fullest line of Thin Goods in this market.

The finest line. The cheapest line. The great clothes line. That is our line, and it is laid out and shown off every day.

Catch on.

THE WHEN

INSURANCE DIRECTORY

- APPEL, D. F. 10 When Block New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Boston. Oldest company in America. Endowment Insurance at Life Rates.
CLAY, HILARY, Mgr. Central Ind., 66 1/2 N. Penn. St. Union Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Maine.
CUMMINGS, M. M. State Agt., 66 E. Market, op. P.O. Washington Life Insurance Co. (Established 1860.) Agents Wanted.
FUNSTON, CHAS. B. Sec'y 35 Vance Block Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Co.
GREGORY & APPEL 96 East Market St. Represent seven first-class fire companies.
HOLLAND & GLAZIER 92 East Market Pacific Mutual Life and Accident.
HOBS, W. H. 74 East Market St. United Firemen's Insurance Co., Philadelphia. Sun Insurance Company, of Philadelphia. Telephone 1009.
LUG, H. M. 42 Vance Block Travelers Insurance Co., of Hartford.
HUBBERT, J. S. Mgr., 90 1/2 E. Market St. Coffin Bldg The Union Central Life Ins. Co., Cincinnati. O. BRETT and SAFEST in the world. Endowment at life rates. Not one dollar in perishable securities.
LEONARD, JOHN R. 22 1/2 East Market The North British and Mercantile, of London. The Star, of England.
MCGILLIARD & DARK, Gen. Ins. Agts., 64 E. Market Indiana Insurance Company, Indianapolis. Citizens Insurance Company, Evansville, Ind. Farnegut Fire Insurance Company, New York. German Fire Insurance Company, Pittsburgh, Pa. Peoples Insurance Company, Pittsburg, Pa.
SUDLOW & MARSH, Managers, 90 1/2 E. Market St., for Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia for the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society of New York. Sheppard Homans' plan of pure life insurance, unimixed with banking, a specialty.
SWAIN, D. F. General Agent, 60 East Market Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., Milwaukee. Assets Jan. 1, 1882, $28,836,618.80.
SHIDLER, D. B. Manager, 3 and 4 Blackford Bldg The Equitable Life Assurance Company, the largest company in the world.

NATURAL GAS

Pleasant fire makes happy homes. Good, safe, reliable work done by MURRAY & MOSIER, 80 Massachusetts Avenue.

A WAR OF WORDS AT CHICAGO

Friends of the Various Candidates Busy at Work for Their Favorites.

A Good Deal of Energetic Work Done Yesterday, Chiefly in the Way of Surveying the Land and Looking Out for Position.

Reasons for Thinking that the Nomination of Gresham is Not Possible.

The Unfair Canvass Made by His Chicago Supporters Has Roused Intense Opposition Among Friends of Other Aspirants.

The Associated Press Attempts to Bolster a Boom by Sending a Falsehood.

Low Wallace Presents the Claims of General Harrison in forcible and eloquent words—Meeting of the National Committee.

SKIRMISHING FOR POSITION.

Friends of the Candidates Survey the General Situation for Points of Advantage.

CHICAGO, June 14.—This has been a day of general maneuvering on the part of the forces massed about the Chicago hotels in the interest of the various presidential aspirants. In the language of a soldier delegate, the generals have been figuring for position, and little more has been accomplished by any one than the making of acquaintances and getting a better idea of how to go to work to accomplish desired results.

Several enthusiastic men arrived by the evening train, most prominent among whom were General Low Wallace and Hon. John R. Elam. General Wallace received a perfect ovation, and was the observed of all observers.

Indiana headquarters were formally opened at the Grand Pacific this morning, and have been crowded all day by Hoosier Republicans and the friends of their candidate. The delegation has been reinforced by the arrival of delegates Chambers and Gardner, of the Vincennes district, and Early, of Terre Haute, while the outside forces have been greatly strengthened by the presence of Hon. J. H. Baker, of Elkhart, and others.

Indiana headquarters were formally opened at the Grand Pacific this morning, and have been crowded all day by Hoosier Republicans and the friends of their candidate. The delegation has been reinforced by the arrival of delegates Chambers and Gardner, of the Vincennes district, and Early, of Terre Haute, while the outside forces have been greatly strengthened by the presence of Hon. J. H. Baker, of Elkhart, and others.

YESTERDAY'S LEADING FEATURE.

The Nomination of Gresham is Not Possible, and His Name May Not Be Presented, Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

CHICAGO, June 14.—There is now one clear fact in the situation to-day, and that is that the nomination of Judge Gresham is entirely out of the question, and there is talk that his name may not be presented to the convention as all. The weakness of the Gresham movement has no relation to Indiana. It is determined by other facts and from other considerations. Probably the most potent factor in the sudden collapse of the Gresham boom is the course of the Chicago press and people in its advocacy.

The Indianapolis accept every opportunity that is offered for a debate as to the availability of their man and have the best of the argument every time. General Harrison is rapidly coming to the front as one among the most probable nominees, and the fight is regarded as having already narrowed to three men—Harrison, Sherman and Alger. There can be but one thing which may be made to interfere with General Harrison's nomination, and that is the attitude assumed by a very few Indiana men, who are conspicuous about the Gresham headquarters, and who imply by their conduct, and by indirection, if not by word of mouth, that the sentiment of the State is divided. Major W. H. Falkner, ex-Attorney-General Baldwin and C. W. Fairbanks are prominent figures at the headquarters of the Gresham people, and this fact is, of course, commented upon by the friends of Sherman, Alger, Allison and others, who seek, naturally enough, to distort the fact that the gentlemen named are for General Gresham as individuals into an evidence of lack of harmony in the party in Indiana.

It is perfectly plain, and the subject of comment in the lobbies, that Judge Gresham is not receiving the support that has been looked for. The Tribune and other Chicago papers have, for weeks, vied with each other in the extravagance of their claims concerning his strength. Delegation after delegation has been represented as being solid for him, but now that they are beginning to arrive, it is becoming evident that these claims do not materialize.

Little can be said or done definitely until the arrival of the State delegations in force. New York, Massachusetts, New England and the Pacific coast will be here on Saturday, and on Sunday the great majority will be on the ground, and there will be music by the whole band. There is plenty of work for all Indiana men, and there is the best spirit of work among all who are here. If the convention is made to know, as the Journal so well puts it this morning, that General Harrison is the only candidate of the Republican party of Indiana, that his candidacy represents the spirit, the purpose and the entire organization of Republicanism, without any antagonism toward anyone, and that the regard of personal friends for Judge Gresham does not indicate or represent any division in the party ranks, there is every reasonable ground but they emphasize the fact that their first, real and only choice is General Harrison.

The Alger men are hopeful and energetic in their advocacy of their favorite, and their work is being pushed with good effect, too. They go about it in a dignified and conciliatory manner, and are constantly employed. They derive great satisfaction from the fact that Patrick Egan, of Nebraska, ex-president of the Irish National Land League, and who is a delegate, is championing their man. There is some talk of Mr. Egan for permanent chairman. His was a conspicuous figure about the hotels to-day, and his friendship for Alger is worth much to the Michigan man.

The Sherman men are equally confident, but there seems to be, with or without reason, a general belief that while he will undoubtedly enter the convention with more votes than any one else, his following will not remain loyal for any great length of time. Ex-Gov. Charles Foster, of Ohio, was one of today's arrivals. "Sherman will be nominated and elected," said he; "the Ohio delegation is solid for him now and all the time."

"A prominent Ohio man," said a reporter, "states that only seven of the Ohio delegation can be relied on for Sherman."

Governor Foster waited awhile, and then said: "You tell him I said he is a liar."

The Allison men are quiet and not at all ostentatious in their conduct. Their headquarters are in close proximity to those of Indiana. They are earnest and loyal in their support of Mr. Allison, and are expecting considerable accessions from all quarters.

Every one is at sea as to the probable course of the New York delegation, and their arrival to-morrow night is looked for with great interest. They will exert a powerful influence in the final settlement of affairs, and will be eagerly besieged by the engineers of the various booms upon their arrival. Col. Fred Grant is already on the ground, but gives no indication of what may be expected. The prevailing opinion is that the candidacy of Mr. Dewey is nothing more than a complimentary character, and that there is nothing earnest in it. There is some talk of Mr. Blaine, and a few enthusiasts are found who are still demanding his nomination, but the sober judgment of level-headed observers is that the Paris letter was intended as a finality, and must be accepted as such.

Several enthusiastic men arrived by the evening train, most prominent among whom were General Low Wallace and Hon. John R. Elam. General Wallace received a perfect ovation, and was the observed of all observers. For nearly an hour at headquarters he was the central figure of a large crowd, every member of which was eager to shake the hand of the distinguished soldier-author, and he was finally forced to beat a retreat to avoid losing an arm. Mr. Elam was also the recipient of much attention. Robert McKee, General Harrison's son-in-law, was one of the late arrivals, as were also delegates Beards, of the Eleventh, and Kinsley, of the Thirteenth district.

The Indiana crowd is delighted at the announcement that the Journal will run a special newspaper train daily, beginning Sunday. Arrangements have been perfected by which the paper will be on the streets and in the hotels before 9 o'clock. The arrival of the Journal this afternoon was the occasion of great satisfaction at Hoosier headquarters, where they were eagerly read by the Hoosier present. W. P. Fishback and Otto Gresham came up this evening, and have joined the Judge's forces. H. S. N.

Still another straw indicative of the latent Blaine feeling is found in the action of the Young Men's Blaine Club of this city. This organization, which numbers some twelve hundred members, will turn out in force on Saturday with banners and badges to meet the Californians. The Irish-American Club will unite with them, and between the two they propose to make a Blaine demonstration that will be at once imposing and significant. A thousand cream-colored hats, each of which will be ornamented with a picture of the President-elect, are en route from Philadelphia, and will be worn in the parade.

OUT OF WHOLE CLOTH.

A Baseless Associated Press Story About a Harrison-Gresham Combination.

CHICAGO, June 14.—The very first combination between the friends of any two candidates, and therefore the first real politics of the Republican national convention, was brought to a culmination to-day. Its importance will not be lessened by the fact that news of the move will come as a total surprise to the great mass of people who have been listening to the bewildering idle gabble that for nearly a week now has been making the hotel corridors here fairly resound. The business which, likely enough, may be the determining factor in the final result of the convention was not transacted in the noisy bedlam that every hotel lobby has become. Away from the mob of loud-voiced, self-important corridor talkers and their gaping groups of listeners, off in a quiet room, less than a dozen men, all personal friends, but happening to be also leading advocates of two of the most prominent candidates before the convention, came together with the utmost informality. They had been—several of them—patiently waiting for some time for the opportunity. Cigars were lighted, there was a free interchange of opinion in a purely conversational way, and within fifteen minutes the thing had been done. The forces of Harrison and Gresham had been harmonized. It was an Indiana family gathering. Among the Indiana leaders present were Attorney-General Minton, ex-Congressman Peelle and Secretary of State Griffin. Gresham's representatives included Mr. C. W. Fairbanks, of Indianapolis; State Senator Robert Graham and Col. Henry Drew. The apparently strained relations between the followers of Harrison and Gresham were mentioned, and both sides recognized the folly of the friends of two Indiana men coming to Chicago and fighting each other. The feeling of those in the conference was that the part of good sense lay in the direction of some sort of union, not in antagonism. The upshot was an understanding, substantially, that the friends of Harrison and Gresham should not attack or attempt to undermine each other; that both sides should do the best they could for their man, but all in the friendliest spirit, and that the Indiana delegates should vote solidly from start to finish. When the time came—a time expected by all Gresham men but not acknowledged as probable by General Harrison's phalanx—the time when it would become evident to the convention that Harrison could not be the nominee, the Gresham should be accorded the support of his native State. It was not stipulated that a meeting of the Indiana delegation should be held to determine whether the time had arrived, it being the purpose to make the matter so fair that no question of the kind could arise. The meeting of the Indiana delegation on the contingency, if the contingency arose, began voting for Gresham, was left to the honor of the delegates themselves.

The foregoing statement was called to the attention of some of the most prominent of General Harrison's supporters now in Chicago, and the reply was received that the story was entirely without foundation; there was no occasion for any combination or conference.—E. P. JOURNAL.

A livelier scene than that presented in the Gresham headquarters this afternoon and evening, could scarcely be imagined. The rooms were crowded constantly. The tall, wiry figure of C. W. Fairbanks seemed everywhere, now pleasantly greeting some old Indiana or cordially grasping the hand of the distinguished Chicagoan and others no less distinguished from outside States who came in to cheer on the Gresham man. Mr. Fairbanks took pains to correct the reports circulated, as he said by the friends of other candidates, for their own profit, that there were other than the friendliest feelings among the old friends of Blaine and the supporters of Gresham. "Why," said Mr. Fairbanks, "the real fact is that Gresham's greatest strength comes from those who always voted for Blaine. Look there," he exclaimed, pointing to where a workman was hanging a portrait of Blaine into the place above those of Lincoln, Grant and other Republican heroes, "does that look like enmity between us and the friends of Blaine?" One of the bystanders, W. B. Roberts, of Indianapolis, nearby, the question of Mr. Fairbanks's remarks. "I am an enthusiastic Gresham man," said he, "and everybody who knows me knows that I have always been for Blaine. Any man who is not a Republican against Gresham is the veriest absolute rot."

THE BLAINE FEELING.

Another Emphatic Denial from Chairman Jones—A Scene in the Pacific Rotunda.

CHICAGO, June 14.—"I am emphatically that no third letter from Mr. Blaine is in existence, and that no communication from him will be presented to the convention next week." This is what Chairman B. F. Jones, of the Republican national committee, said this evening to a representative of the United Press. He had just finished reading one of the News dispatches. This dispatch quoted an afternoon paper of Pittsburg as reiterating the declaration that, in spite of Mr. Jones's denials, such a letter was in existence; that the information came from a trustworthy source; that the letter would be read to the convention, and that Blaine's friends, who were still working every effort to accomplish its suppression. Mr. Jones read the dispatch carefully a second time, and then resumed: "I received the first letter from Mr. Blaine, and Whitelaw Reid the second. No further communications have come to either of us, and if Mr. Blaine had addressed himself to me as a third party I think that I would like to have heard of it by this time. I thought that my denial of yesterday would have settled the matter. As it seems not to have done so, however, I would thank the press to say for me, absolutely and unqualifiedly, that I know nothing of any such letter."

And as to Blaine's friends still working for his nomination," he said.

"That," replied Mr. Jones, "goes into the same category. None of his friends, so far as I know, are doing anything of the kind. They recognize the fact that his withdrawal is absolute and unequivocal; that he is out of the field in every sense; that his name cannot be considered even in the most remote contingency, that is his position, and that is the position of his friends. What would it avail for them to work for a nomination which, even if successful, would be immediately followed by a declination of Mr. Blaine's friends to do with him either him or the Republican party in any such a position."

Then the individuals who are still booming him," he said.

Mr. Jones interrupted the query with a suggestive shrug of the shoulders and wave of the hand. He could not have any more plainly answered "fool friends," even if he had spoke the words.

No matter, however, how one of the most intimate friends of the man from Maine may regard the query, Mr. Jones was not to be moved. He was certain that the latter was earnest and enthusiastic as the headmen of some of the other candidates. Witness, for instance, the contemptible that member of much commotion in the rotunda of the Grand Pacific to-day. Col. A. C. Babcock, the well-known politician, appeared at the desk with an armful of newspapers. He wanted to know what place longed the picture of Sherman, Allison, Alger and Gresham. But mine host Drake wouldn't have it so. "Blaine isn't a candidate," he said, "and his picture can't be put up here. I'm not going to encourage any Blaine army."

Both of the white-headed men were angry and a personal collision seemed imminent. The crowd that had gathered cheered Babcock. It was a long time before the two could be separated. The windows of one of the stores in the hotel rotunda, and it went into paroxysms of enthusiasm when, after calling a Blaine lithograph on one side, he engaged two colored men to stand guard to it, with the threat "I've put that picture there, and I'd like to see the man who will take it down. I can lick Drake of any one else in the city."

The irate Colonel concluded with the declaration that he would cover the hotel and the town with Blaine pictures between now and the convention, and he will keep his word.

Still another straw indicative of the latent Blaine feeling is found in the action of the Young Men's Blaine Club of this city. This organization, which numbers some twelve hundred members, will turn out in force on Saturday with banners and badges to meet the Californians. The Irish-American Club will unite with them, and between the two they propose to make a Blaine demonstration that will be at once imposing and significant. A thousand cream-colored hats, each of which will be ornamented with a picture of the President-elect, are en route from Philadelphia, and will be worn in the parade.

OUT OF WHOLE CLOTH.

A Baseless Associated Press Story About a Harrison-Gresham Combination.

CHICAGO, June 14.—The very first combination between the friends of any two candidates, and therefore the first real politics of the Republican national convention, was brought to a culmination to-day. Its importance will not be lessened by the fact that news of the move will come as a total surprise to the great mass of people who have been listening to the bewildering idle gabble that for nearly a week now has been making the hotel corridors here fairly resound. The business which, likely enough, may be the determining factor in the final result of the convention was not transacted in the noisy bedlam that every hotel lobby has become. Away from the mob of loud-voiced, self-important corridor talkers and their gaping groups of listeners, off in a quiet room, less than a dozen men, all personal friends, but happening to be also leading advocates of two of the most prominent candidates before the convention, came together with the utmost informality. They had been—several of them—patiently waiting for some time for the opportunity. Cigars were lighted, there was a free interchange of opinion in a purely conversational way, and within fifteen minutes the thing had been done. The forces of Harrison and Gresham had been harmonized. It was an Indiana family gathering. Among the Indiana leaders present were Attorney-General Minton, ex-Congressman Peelle and Secretary of State Griffin. Gresham's representatives included Mr. C. W. Fairbanks, of Indianapolis; State Senator Robert Graham and Col. Henry Drew. The apparently strained relations between the followers of Harrison and Gresham were mentioned, and both sides recognized the folly of the friends of two Indiana men coming to Chicago and fighting each other. The feeling of those in the conference was that the part of good sense lay in the direction of some sort of union, not in antagonism. The upshot was an understanding, substantially, that the friends of Harrison and Gresham should not attack or attempt to undermine each other; that both sides should do the best they could for their man, but all in the friendliest spirit, and that the Indiana delegates should vote solidly from start to finish. When the time came—a time expected by all Gresham men but not acknowledged as probable by General Harrison's phalanx—the time when it would become evident to the convention that Harrison could not be the nominee, the Gresham should be accorded the support of his native State. It was not stipulated that a meeting of the Indiana delegation should be held to determine whether the time had arrived, it being the purpose to make the matter so fair that no question of the kind could arise. The meeting of the Indiana delegation on the contingency, if the contingency arose, began voting for Gresham, was left to the honor of the delegates themselves.

The foregoing statement was called to the attention of some of the most prominent of General Harrison's supporters now in Chicago, and the reply was received that the story was entirely without foundation; there was no occasion for any combination or conference.—E. P. JOURNAL.

A livelier scene than that presented in the Gresham headquarters this afternoon and evening, could scarcely be imagined. The rooms were crowded constantly. The tall, wiry figure of C. W. Fairbanks seemed everywhere, now pleasantly greeting some old Indiana or cordially grasping the hand of the distinguished Chicagoan and others no less distinguished from outside States who came in to cheer on the Gresham man. Mr. Fairbanks took pains to correct the reports circulated, as he said by the friends of other candidates, for their own profit, that there were other than the friendliest feelings among the old friends of Blaine and the supporters of Gresham. "Why," said Mr. Fairbanks, "the real fact is that Gresham's greatest strength comes from those who always voted for Blaine. Look there," he exclaimed, pointing to where a workman was hanging a portrait of Blaine into the place above those of Lincoln, Grant and other Republican heroes, "does that look like enmity between us and the friends of Blaine?" One of the bystanders, W. B. Roberts, of Indianapolis, nearby, the question of Mr. Fairbanks's remarks. "I am an enthusiastic Gresham man," said he, "and everybody who knows me knows that I have always been for Blaine. Any man who is not a Republican against Gresham is the veriest absolute rot."

THE BLAINE FEELING.

Another Emphatic Denial from Chairman Jones—A Scene in the Pacific Rotunda.

CHICAGO, June 14.—"I am emphatically that no third letter from Mr. Blaine is in existence, and that no communication from him will be presented to the convention next week." This is what Chairman B. F. Jones, of the Republican national committee, said this evening to a representative of the United Press. He had just finished reading one of the News dispatches. This dispatch quoted an afternoon paper of Pittsburg as reiterating the declaration that, in spite of Mr. Jones's denials, such a letter was in existence; that the information came from a trustworthy source; that the letter would be read to the convention, and that Blaine's friends, who were still working every effort to accomplish its suppression. Mr. Jones read the dispatch carefully a second time, and then resumed: "I received the first letter from Mr. Blaine, and Whitelaw Reid the second. No further communications have come to either of us, and if Mr. Blaine had addressed himself to me as a third party I think that I would like to have heard of it by this time. I thought that my denial of yesterday would have settled the matter. As it seems not to have done so, however, I would thank the press to say for me, absolutely and unqualifiedly, that I know nothing of any such letter."

And as to Blaine's friends still working for his nomination," he said.

"That," replied Mr. Jones, "goes into the same category. None of his friends, so far as I know, are doing anything of the kind. They recognize the fact that his withdrawal is absolute and unequivocal; that he is out of the field in every sense; that his name cannot be considered even in the most remote contingency, that is his position, and that is the position of his friends. What would it avail for them to work for a nomination which, even if successful, would be immediately followed by a declination of Mr. Blaine's friends to do with him either him or the Republican party in any such a position."

Then the individuals who are still booming him," he said.

Mr. Jones interrupted the query with a suggestive shrug of the shoulders and wave of the hand. He could not have any more plainly answered "fool friends," even if he had spoke the words.

No matter, however, how one of the most intimate friends of the man from Maine may regard the query, Mr. Jones was not to be moved. He was certain that the latter was earnest and enthusiastic as the headmen of some of the other candidates. Witness, for instance, the contemptible that member of much commotion in the rotunda of the Grand Pacific to-day. Col. A. C. Babcock, the well-known politician, appeared at the desk with an armful of newspapers. He wanted to know what place longed the picture of Sherman, Allison, Alger and Gresham. But mine host Drake wouldn't have it so. "Blaine isn't a candidate," he said, "and his picture can't be put up here. I'm not going to encourage any Blaine army."

Both of the white-headed men were angry and a personal collision seemed imminent. The crowd that had gathered cheered Babcock. It was a long time before the two could be separated. The windows of one of the stores in the hotel rotunda, and it went into paroxysms of enthusiasm when, after calling a Blaine lithograph on one side, he engaged two colored men to stand guard to it, with the threat "I've put that picture there, and I'd like to see the man who will take it down. I can lick Drake of any one else in the city."

The irate Colonel concluded with the declaration that he would cover the hotel and the town with Blaine pictures between now and the convention, and he will keep his word.

Still another straw indicative of the latent Blaine feeling is found in the action of the Young Men's Blaine Club of this city. This organization, which numbers some twelve hundred members, will turn out in force on Saturday with banners and badges to meet the Californians. The Irish-American Club will unite with them, and between the two they propose to make a Blaine demonstration that will be at once imposing and significant. A thousand cream-colored hats, each of which will be ornamented with a picture of the President-elect, are en route from Philadelphia, and will be worn in the parade.

OUT OF WHOLE CLOTH.

A Baseless Associated Press Story About a Harrison-Gresham Combination.

CHICAGO, June 14.—The very first combination between the friends of any two candidates, and therefore the first real politics of the Republican national convention, was brought to a culmination to-day. Its importance will not be lessened by the fact that news of the move will come as a total surprise to the great mass of people who have been listening to the bewildering idle gabble that for nearly a week now has been making the hotel corridors here fairly resound. The business which, likely enough, may be the determining factor in the final result of the convention was not transacted in the noisy bedlam that every hotel lobby has become. Away from the mob of loud-voiced, self-important corridor talkers and their gaping groups of listeners, off in a quiet room, less than a dozen men, all personal friends, but happening to be also leading advocates of two of the most prominent candidates before the convention, came together with the utmost informality. They had been—several of them—patiently waiting for some time for the opportunity. Cigars were lighted, there was a free interchange of opinion in a purely conversational way, and within fifteen minutes the thing had been done. The forces of Harrison and Gresham had been harmonized. It was an Indiana family gathering. Among the Indiana leaders present were Attorney-General Minton, ex-Congressman Peelle and Secretary of State Griffin. Gresham's representatives included Mr. C. W. Fairbanks, of Indianapolis; State Senator Robert Graham and Col. Henry Drew. The apparently strained relations between the followers of Harrison and Gresham were mentioned, and both sides recognized the folly of the friends of two Indiana men coming to Chicago and fighting each other. The feeling of those in the conference was that the part of good sense lay in the direction of some sort of union, not in antagonism. The upshot was an understanding, substantially, that the friends of Harrison and Gresham should not attack or attempt to undermine each other; that both sides should do the best they could for their man, but all in the friendliest spirit, and that the Indiana delegates should vote solidly from start to finish. When the time came—a time expected by all Gresham men but not acknowledged as probable by General Harrison's phalanx—the time when it would become evident to the convention that Harrison could not be the nominee, the Gresham should be accorded the support of his native State. It was not stipulated that a meeting of the Indiana delegation should be held to determine whether the time had arrived, it being the purpose to make the matter so fair that no question of the kind could arise. The meeting of the Indiana delegation on the contingency, if the contingency arose, began voting for Gresham, was left to the honor of the delegates themselves.

The foregoing statement was called to the attention of some of the most prominent of General Harrison's supporters now in Chicago, and the reply was received that the story was entirely without foundation; there was no occasion for any combination or conference.—E. P. JOURNAL.

A livelier scene than that presented in the Gresham headquarters this afternoon and evening, could scarcely be imagined. The rooms were crowded constantly. The tall, wiry figure of C. W. Fairbanks seemed everywhere, now pleasantly greeting some old Indiana or cordially grasping the hand of the distinguished Chicagoan and others no less distinguished from outside States who came in to cheer on the Gresham man. Mr. Fairbanks took pains to correct the reports circulated, as he said by the friends of other candidates, for their own profit, that there were other than the friendliest feelings among the old friends of Blaine and the supporters of Gresham. "Why," said Mr. Fairbanks, "the real fact is that Gresham's greatest strength comes from those who always voted for Blaine. Look there," he exclaimed, pointing to where a workman was hanging a portrait of Blaine into the place above those of Lincoln, Grant and other Republican heroes, "does that look like enmity between us and the friends of Blaine?" One of the bystanders, W. B. Roberts, of Indianapolis, nearby, the question of Mr. Fairbanks's remarks. "I am an enthusiastic Gresham man," said he, "and everybody who knows me knows that I have always been for Blaine. Any man who is not a Republican against Gresham is the veriest absolute rot."

THE BLAINE FEELING.

Another Emphatic Denial from Chairman Jones—A Scene in the Pacific Rotunda.

CHICAGO, June 14.—"I am emphatically that no third letter from Mr. Blaine is in existence, and that no communication from him will be presented to the convention next week." This is what Chairman B. F. Jones, of the Republican national committee, said this evening to a representative of the United Press. He had just finished reading one of the News dispatches. This dispatch quoted an afternoon paper of Pittsburg as reiterating the declaration that, in spite of Mr. Jones's denials, such a letter was in existence; that the information came from a trustworthy source; that the letter would be read to the convention, and that Blaine's friends, who were still working every effort to accomplish its suppression. Mr. Jones read the dispatch carefully a second time, and then resumed: "I received the first letter from Mr. Blaine, and Whitelaw Reid the second. No further communications have come to either of us, and if Mr. Blaine had addressed himself to me as a third party I think that I would like to have heard of it by this time. I thought that my denial of yesterday would have settled the matter. As it seems not to have done so, however, I would thank the press to say for me, absolutely and unqualifiedly, that I know nothing of any such letter."

And as to Blaine's friends still working for his nomination," he said.

"That," replied Mr. Jones, "goes into the same category. None of his friends, so far as I know, are doing anything of the kind. They recognize the fact that his withdrawal is absolute and unequivocal; that he is out of the field in every sense; that his name cannot be considered even in the most remote contingency, that is his position, and that is the position of his friends. What would it avail for them to work for a nomination which, even if successful, would be immediately followed by a declination of Mr. Blaine's friends to do with him either him or the Republican party in any such a position."

Then the individuals who are still booming him," he said.

Mr. Jones interrupted the query with a suggestive shrug of the shoulders and wave of the hand. He could not have any more plainly answered "fool friends," even if he had spoke the words.

No matter, however, how one of the most intimate friends of the man from Maine may regard the query, Mr. Jones was not to be moved. He was certain that the latter was earnest and enthusiastic as the headmen of some of the other candidates. Witness, for instance, the contemptible that member of much commotion in the rotunda of the Grand Pacific to-day. Col. A. C. Babcock, the well-known politician, appeared at the desk with an armful of newspapers. He wanted to know what place longed the picture of Sherman, Allison, Alger and Gresham. But mine host Drake wouldn't have it so. "Blaine isn't a candidate," he said, "and his picture can't be put up here. I'm not going to encourage any Blaine army."

Both of the white-headed men were angry and a personal collision seemed imminent. The crowd that had gathered cheered Babcock. It was a long time before the two could be separated. The windows of one of the stores in the hotel rotunda, and it went into paroxysms of enthusiasm when, after calling a Blaine lithograph on one side, he engaged two colored men to stand guard to it, with the threat "I've put that picture there, and I'd like to see the man who will take it down. I can lick Drake of any one else in the city."

The irate Colonel concluded with the declaration that he would cover the hotel and the town with Blaine pictures between now and the convention, and he will keep his word.

Still another straw indicative of the latent Blaine feeling is found in the action of the Young Men's Blaine Club of this city. This organization, which numbers some twelve hundred members, will turn out in force on Saturday with banners and badges to meet the Californians. The Irish-American Club will unite with them, and between the two they propose to make a Blaine demonstration that will be at once imposing and significant. A thousand cream-colored hats, each of which will be ornamented with a picture of the President-elect, are en route from Philadelphia, and will be worn in the parade.

OUT OF WHOLE CLOTH.

A Baseless Associated Press Story About a Harrison-Gresham Combination.

CHICAGO, June 14.—The very first combination between the friends of any two candidates, and therefore the first real politics of the Republican national convention, was brought to a culmination to-day. Its importance will not be