THE WHEN

Mr. Macdonald, in his "Scientific Solution of the Social Problem," advises, among other things, such as "quit drinking alcohol," "do not be so foolish as to cook your food," etc., "to drop the absurd and injurious custom of wearing clothes." This is a direct blow at the WHEN, and comes at a time when we can ill afford to indorse the scheme.

WILLIAM'S WARLIKE TALK.

It is construed both at St. Petersburg and Berlin as a flag directed at England. (Copyright, 1890, by the New York Associated Press.) BERLIN, May 17.—Short as the Emperor's utterances at Konigsberg were, they sufficed to irritate the Russian government and dispel all delusions regarding the possibility of a renewal of the entente with Russia.

As Russia is the only possible frontier against the Triple Alliance, the Emperor's aggressive declaration, as now interpreted here, at St. Petersburg, as aimed against her. The Emperor's utterances at Konigsberg were, they sufficed to irritate the Russian government and dispel all delusions regarding the possibility of a renewal of the entente with Russia.

THE MENACE TO EUROPEAN PEACE.

Russia the Great Disturbing Influence—Severe Feasible Retortions.

LONDON, May 17.—Russia appears to be the great menace to European peace, and the menace in the direction of Austria and Bulgaria, as well as Asia. The sapper and miner companies of the Baltic and Black sea coasts are being formed into fortress companies, to garrison Cronstadt, Sebastopol and other strongholds, whose names bring back memories of the Crimean war.

THE FAR EAST.

China Determined to Stay Russian Aggression on Her Border—A Korean Degraded.

LONDON, May 17.—The Chinese make no concealment of their preparations to resist any aggression by Russia in Asia. They have restored the wall which formerly surrounded Kuldja, and are strengthening their forts in every direction along the Russian frontier.

Acrimonious Debate Between Members of Both Parties—Conduct for Which the Indian should Have Been Expelled.

MR. BYNUM CAUSES A RUMPU.

Censured by the House for Unparliamentary Language Toward Mr. Bayne.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—"I desire simply to say that I did the other day, knowing full well the meaning of the words, and that I was responsible for them, denounce Mr. Campbell as a liar and perjurer. I desire to say now that I accept and am willing to believe that I have as great confidence in the character of Campbell as I have in the character of the gentleman who made this attack upon me."

Such was the culmination of an hour's stormy scene in the House at 4 o'clock this afternoon. It looked as though Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, would be expelled. The proceedings which led to this climax were of a personal character.

Mr. Campbell is a well-known labor leader of Pittsburg, and some statements which he made before the committee on ways and means have been denounced by Mr. Bynum, he addressed a letter to Colonel Bayne, explaining the situation, and the letter had just been read before the House when Mr. Bynum took the floor to give utterance to the astonishing language quoted above.

It required a long and acrimonious running fire between the Democratic and Republican sides of the House before Mr. Bynum could get the floor, on a question of personal privilege, to class Representative Bayne with Mr. Campbell, who had been branded as a liar and a perjurer. The appellation, of course, applied to Mr. Bayne as directly and offensively as it was possible.

Mr. Bynum's explanation of how he came to denounce Mr. Campbell was extremely brief and quite as unsatisfactory. He had, in fact, no explanation to make, only that he thought the exponent of labor and the defendant of the Republican tariff bill must be nothing less than a liar and perjurer.

Such language as this, of course, far beneath the dignity of any legislative body, but it is in direct keeping with the proceedings of the Democrats in the Indiana Legislature, of which Mr. Bynum was the presiding officer just before he came to Congress.

When General Cutcheon, of Michigan, demanded that the words shall be taken down and reported from the committee of the whole on the State of the Union, in which the House was working, so that it could act upon the unparliamentary language as an independent legislative body, the Democrats fought like tigers against the outlook for the expulsion of one of their members.

Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, who does not often forget the plantation and proprietary manners of his Southern colleagues, waved his heavy white locks and clenched fist at Colonel Bayne in a threatening manner and denounced him for having "lugged the affairs of a private citizen in on the floor of the House." Colonel Bayne swiftly walked from his seat on the Republican side into the central aisle, and looking Mr. Breckinridge hard in the face, declared dramatically that this affair of Mr. Campbell was his own affair, and that he was responsible here and elsewhere on the floor of the House or in any other place.

Mr. Bynum, who had been ordered to the Speaker's desk with the gavel and called for order at the top of his voice, about forty members stood on their feet and yelled at each other. Mr. Bynum followed a long debate on the question of Mr. Bynum being permitted to take the floor for a defense under the question of personal privilege, many of the members contending that there could be no such thing as a personal privilege while the House was working in committee of the whole. The Chair ruled, however, that Mr. Bynum should be allowed to make a statement. By a rising vote of 113 to 90, on the question of Mr. Bynum's motion of General Cutcheon was adopted, and the language of Mr. Bynum reported by General Grosvener to the House, with Speaker Reed in the Chair. It now looked like business, and almost everyone expected that the next move would be the adoption of a resolution expelling Mr. Bynum from the House.

The Democrats began to plead the by-law act and to fight against the ultimate question. For fully twenty minutes there was another scene of confusion. Quite a number of Senators, having heard of the row, came over, and occupied seats on the floor of the House. Around Mr. Bynum clustered Senator Gray, of Delaware, and Representatives Holman, McMillin, Wilson of West Virginia, Mills and a number of others who gave him all sorts of advice, most of it being to make an apology before the question of expulsion was presented to the House. The Speaker's ruling of the House covering the use of unparliamentary language reflecting on the honor and integrity of members, and giving the House power to expel members, was not language. The Democrats again presented a number of propositions intended to shut off the final question, which was presented by General Cutcheon in the form of a resolution, and which was believed on the Democratic side to call for expulsion. The yeas and nays were demanded. For every move, and in this the Republicans joined with the Democrats, as they were not only not afraid to be put upon record, but were anxious to be recorded against the gentleman from Indiana. After every means of the Democratic filibusters was exhausted, the resolution of censure presented by General Cutcheon was adopted.

WILD SCENES IN THE HOUSE. Mr. Bynum's Conduct Applauded by the Brigadiers—The Debate in Detail. WASHINGTON, May 17.—During consideration, by the House, of the tariff bill in committee of the whole, Mr. Bayne of Pennsylvania, in speaking to a verbal amendment, sent to the Clerk's desk and had read a letter from James Campbell of Pittsburg, dening the statements reflected upon his character, made a few days since by Mr. Bynum of Indiana and Mr.
