

NEW-MADE GRAVE SPOILED

Brutal Onslaught Committed by Ghouls in a Private Cemetery at Mt. Jackson.

Corpse of Emma Cossel Torn from its Casket at Midnight, During a Driving Storm, and Carried to the Central College.

Robbers Tracked Through the Fresh Snow by the Sexton and Relatives.

Found and Identified in the Dissecting-Room—Janitor Under Arrest—Dr. Long's Statement.

The body of Miss Emma Cossel, sister of Mrs. Samuel H. Corbaley, and daughter of William Cossel, was stolen from its resting place in the Mt. Jackson cemetery, in the blinding snow-storm of Monday night. The ghouls had relieved the grave of its contents by midnight, and with a fleet horse and wagon drove rapidly to the city. It was a narrow escape they had from detection at the grave-yard, for within a few minutes after they left, W. H. Speer, owner of the grave-yard, passed along, on his way home from lodge. It was still snowing furiously, and the slight of fresh earth, not yet hidden by the snow, caught his eye as he passed the place of the dead. He saw, too, the fresh tracks of men leading across his meadow. His suspicions were aroused, and his examination of the grave-yard confirmed his fears. The grave of Emma Cossel, who was his kinswoman, had been tampered with. The even surface of the snow was broken, and the formal disfigure, which he had himself arranged on the mound, were tossed aside. The head and foot-boards had disappeared from their places.

TRACKING THE GHOULS. With the conviction that the body had been stolen, Mr. Speer notified Mr. Cossel, father of the dead girl, and together with a son, Andrew Cossel, the three returned to the grave-yard. It was nearly 1 o'clock, and the snow had ceased falling. They found a place where the imprint of feet ended and the track of horse and wagon began. The track was followed into the city, and led them upon New York street. It was not so easy to keep a trace of the wagon on the city streets, but as the trail led by the house of Samuel H. Corbaley, who the deceased died, was garrisoned, and with his own horse, joined in the search. This was as no. 418 West Washington street, a square east the tracks seemed to turn into the gutter in front of Dr. J. B. Long's office, at No. 418 West Washington street, and the party divided, Mr. Corbaley going south on West street, and the rest continuing east. Both found tracks which seemed to resemble that of the horse and wagon, and following it Mr. Corbaley went south, he says, to the old burying grounds on South West street, where he had been taken to Massachusetts avenue, where the trail was lost. The parties met again by chance at the dissecting room, at 230 o'clock in the morning decided to report the matter to the police.

Captain Dawson heard their story and advised that he go the neighborhood of the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons, at which the dissection was directed, and interrogate the Merchant policeman. This individual, however, they could not find, and the search was continued by a wagon track and similar horse tracks to those which they had previously followed. The wagon, it was seen, had appeared in the street on the side of the college, in the alley, where it is customary to receive the bodies consigned to the dissecting room, and had laid away in following it Mr. Corbaley went south, he says, to the old burying grounds on South West street, where he had been taken to Massachusetts avenue, where the trail was lost. The parties met again by chance at the dissecting room, at 230 o'clock in the morning decided to report the matter to the police.

Mr. Corbaley again went to the college as daylight, accompanied by Captain Dawson, who was with him, and a search was made upon Otto Von Tassner, the janitor, for information as to whether a body had been received, and, if so, whether it had been received. He refused to allow the officer and Mr. Corbaley to enter the dissecting-room, and said they would have to see Dr. Long. The latter was in the dissecting room, while awaiting his arrival a close watch was kept upon the janitor.

When Dr. Long was notified of the reason for calling for him at the college he stated at once that a body had been received during the night, and led the way to the room in which the vats are kept. Mr. Corbaley quickly identified the naked figure before him as the one he had turned in sickness and had laid away in the grave only on Sunday last. The deceased died, Dr. Long said, in a vault in Crown Hill cemetery, on that day.

"Doctor," said Mr. Corbaley to Dr. Long, "how is this?" "I know nothing of who this was, Mr. Corbaley," was the reply, "but I would not have accepted it if I had. I cannot tell you how sorry I am this has happened."

"Who brought the body here?" asked Mr. Corbaley. "I was called out of my house," said Dr. Long, "about 10 o'clock last night, and a man at the door said he had something for the college from the poor farm. I said all right, and the man drove away, and catching the last car, went to the college to receive the body."

"Did you know," Dr. Long was asked, "No; they were strangers to me. It was just light enough to grope about safely at the college, and I could not see the man at all. I think I could identify a man called 'Jeff' by his companions, but I am not certain."

The body was turned over to Kregelo & Whitsett for a second time, and was placed in its vault for safe keeping. An examination was made of the grave yesterday morning. The body had been removed through a narrow chute dug down to the head of the coffin, and the head-plate of the head-plate. This was broken loose and was found in an upright position in the loose earth, with which it had been thrown into the excavation. The head of the coffin contained the body, which had been placed in a hiding place. The coffin, a wooden one, cloth covered, and bearing the usual silver plate with the words "Rest in peace," was removed from the grave by Mr. Speer.

THE JANITOR ARRESTED. The facts as related above were in the main given a Journal reporter last night by Mr. Corbaley. When informed that Von Tassner, the janitor, was under arrest, Mr. Corbaley said he hoped that the trial will develop something that will lead to the exposure and punishment of the ghouls. "I do not believe," said Mr. Corbaley, "that Dr. Long would have accepted the body if he had known who it was. He has been my friend for many years. There will be no prosecution against him. I am after the fellows who robbed the grave."

The warrant for Von Tassner's arrest was executed by Deputy Bell, acting for City Prosecutor Wright, who could not be found. The body of the deceased, consisting of a body stolen from dissecting purposes, which is made a felony, punishable by from one to three years imprisonment. He asserts that he is innocent of the offense, and never saw nor knew of the body being received until a demand was made upon him for it. No attempt was made to bail him out by the college authorities. The reason for the arrest, as stated by a member of the faculty: "Von Tassner came to us some time ago broken in health and pale, and took the place of janitor. Several times he was seen being seen by the most skillful taxidermists in the country."

IS ON TRIAL FOR HER RAPE

MURDERER ON TRIAL.

Lillie Stevens Pleads Insanity for the Killing of Margaret Ross.

The trial of Lillie Stevens, indicted for the murder of Margaret Ross, in North Indianapolis, in November, began yesterday in the Criminal Court. The jury was impaneled with some difficulty and a certain measure of disgust upon the part of bailiff Sheehan. He filled the empty chairs with men of intelligent appearance, apparently men of character and judgment, but each side nearly exhausted its challenges before a jury was selected. Then it contained a professional juror or two, and some others whose appearance, at least, was not so promising an index of capability. The professional juror is having pretty steady employment in several of the courts.

The State began the trial with a statement of the facts of the crime. Lillie Stevens came to her mother's house, about 11 o'clock at night, and was about to enter her own bedroom, when she found the door locked. The glass pane in the door had been broken, and, showing the curtain aside, she found, as she says, Margaret Ross and Albert Gresh in a compromising position. She called them to open the door, but they refused to do so. She then drew her revolver and fired. The bullet struck Margaret Ross in the lower part of the abdomen and caused her death. For this crime the defendant was indicted on a charge of murder. It will not be necessary, continued Mr. Holtzman, to prove the fact that she was sane at the time the act was directed by a sane mind, capable of knowing right from wrong, and being fully responsible.

The witnesses for the State testified concerning the shooting, the principal evidence being that of the neighbors who saw the alleged paramour of the murdered woman. He said he had gone to the house in the evening to get a package of mail. He gave Mrs. Winkie, mother of the defendant, 15 cents to get a can of beer. While she was on the sidewalk and Mrs. Ross was sitting on the side of the bed, about two feet apart, he heard some one trying to open the door. He next saw some one push through the door, and he heard the shot. He said he did not see who fired the shot. He denied that he had done anything to excite the shooter, and that the testimony of Dr. Canady and the hospital physicians as to the course of the bullet and the condition of the body, as given by the State. Dr. Canady lives across the street from Samuel Winkie's house, and when the police arrested her, she was in the ambulance. He said he did not see who fired the shot. He denied that he had done anything to excite the shooter, and that the testimony of Dr. Canady and the hospital physicians as to the course of the bullet and the condition of the body, as given by the State.

The defense began with the testimony of Dr. W. V. Tolley, of North Mississippi street, who examined the body of the defendant for eighteen years, and had been called to give her medical attention and to attend her in the hospital. He testified that she was sane at the time of the shooting, but not for fifteen years past. In reply to a question as to his opinion of her mind he said: "I do not think she is insane, but I believe she is not ordinarily bright."

Dr. Tolley's testimony was followed by that of Fannie B. Dappert, who said she saw the witness, and after a pause, he continued, "I consider her mind sound but weak."

The State then called Dr. J. B. Long, who testified that he saw the witness retire without cross-examination. Dr. J. B. Long was then called. He had known the defendant for two years, and lives across the street from her home. He had seen her every day, and had prescribed for her. At one time she had petitioned through him for a divorce, and he had given her the grip. On the day of the shooting she had called at his office and received medicine for a headache, and he had given her a prescription for it. He said he had seen her every day, and had prescribed for her. At one time she had petitioned through him for a divorce, and he had given her the grip. On the day of the shooting she had called at his office and received medicine for a headache, and he had given her a prescription for it.

The State did not change the effect of this witness testimony, and other witnesses, not physicians, testified during the remainder of the afternoon to the same general effect. The defendant was a deplorable looking object as she sat by her mother's side, with a handkerchief tied about her head. Her dress was a simple, plain, black, and physical pain, the latter being due to some ailment. She watched the witness, and when he testified, she turned her head to the other side of her mother. She resembled a child, and her mother's face came by her eccentricities with the honest of nature.

The counsel for the defense are too numerous to mention, but do a great deal of mutual prompting and consultation. John Heardon managed to keep well out of sight yesterday, but he is in a dictum, and still holds the attention of a lobby full of voters, besides a number of ladies interested in the fate of the defendant.

CAN VISIT HIS CHILD. Domestic Troubles of the Dauperts Bring a Great Crowd Into Court. Some months since Judge Taylor refused to give a divorce to either Fannie B. Daupert or George H. Daupert, though the former had filed a petition and the latter a cross-petition. The trial has shown the court that the allegations are mostly untrue. The child of the couple, a bright, vigorous boy about three years of age, was committed to the mother's care, with instructions to allow his father to visit him, at his own pleasure. Daupert recently complained to the court that this liberty had been denied him by his wife, and that she was living in Hampshire. The court thereupon ordered the wife and the Schlies to court.

They responded yesterday, and so great is the local interest in the case that about half the membership of the M. E. Church of that locality was present to testify in the matter. It was shown that the boy's father always brought some one with him when he made his visits, and that they were seated only on that account. Daupert explained that his father-in-law had threatened to do him violence, and that he took a friend along for protection. Judge Taylor informed him that if Mr. Schlies should testify that he was a Polander named John Mica, who has been sleeping for thirteen months and shows no signs of waking, he would be committed to the Wilkesbarre City Hospital about fourteen months ago. The sleeper opens his eyes every day, but he does not get up, and he immediately draws his head under the covers and falls into a comatose condition. The case has not been explained.

REPUBLICANS OF INDIANA

Gen. Harrison's Administration Given Cordial Support in His Own State.

"Anti" Movement Does Not Appear to Exist—District Conventions To-Morrow—Many Men Mentioned for the Governorship.

There is a good deal of Republican politics going on over the State just now. The "hustling" which began even before the State committee issued its call for the organization primaries, will reach its climax to-morrow in the various district conventions, two of which, the Seventh and Fifth will meet in this city.

The notable thing thus far shown in the first primaries and county organizations is the almost complete non-existence of what has been heralded abroad for the most part in Democratic newspapers, and the "anti-administration movement." It is but reasonable to suppose that there are throughout Indiana many Republicans whose ideal leader is General Harrison, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Sherman, Mr. McKinley or some other Republican of national fame. These differences of opinion are always prevalent, are always to be expected, and are always respected. But the fact is apparent that the vast majority of Indiana Republicans place their faith in President Harrison. There is a very prevalent feeling among the Republicans of the State that there is not the least likelihood of a Republican in convention between the President and Mr. Blaine, a feeling which is the only logical result of the situation. Mr. Blaine was a candidate for the presidency here, and he believes he would remain at the head of the Cabinet while his friends were prosecuting his campaign. He was a candidate for the presidency here, and he believes he would remain at the head of the Cabinet while his friends were prosecuting his campaign.

It will be observed that two of these conventions meet in this city, the Fifth and Seventh districts. The Fifth district will meet in the federal court-room at 1 P. M., and will be called to order by Charles Stiles, of Westfield, and the Seventh district will meet at the same hour in the district court room No. 3, and will be called to order by W. F. Dyer, of Anderson. The candidates for the position of committeemen in the different districts, so far as can be ascertained, are as follows: First District—J. H. Homanway, Booneville; M. B. There is a good deal of Republican politics going on over the State just now. The "hustling" which began even before the State committee issued its call for the organization primaries, will reach its climax to-morrow in the various district conventions, two of which, the Seventh and Fifth will meet in this city.

The notable thing thus far shown in the first primaries and county organizations is the almost complete non-existence of what has been heralded abroad for the most part in Democratic newspapers, and the "anti-administration movement." It is but reasonable to suppose that there are throughout Indiana many Republicans whose ideal leader is General Harrison, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Sherman, Mr. McKinley or some other Republican of national fame. These differences of opinion are always prevalent, are always to be expected, and are always respected. But the fact is apparent that the vast majority of Indiana Republicans place their faith in President Harrison. There is a very prevalent feeling among the Republicans of the State that there is not the least likelihood of a Republican in convention between the President and Mr. Blaine, a feeling which is the only logical result of the situation. Mr. Blaine was a candidate for the presidency here, and he believes he would remain at the head of the Cabinet while his friends were prosecuting his campaign. He was a candidate for the presidency here, and he believes he would remain at the head of the Cabinet while his friends were prosecuting his campaign.

It will be observed that two of these conventions meet in this city, the Fifth and Seventh districts. The Fifth district will meet in the federal court-room at 1 P. M., and will be called to order by Charles Stiles, of Westfield, and the Seventh district will meet at the same hour in the district court room No. 3, and will be called to order by W. F. Dyer, of Anderson. The candidates for the position of committeemen in the different districts, so far as can be ascertained, are as follows: First District—J. H. Homanway, Booneville; M. B. Bickley, Evansville. Second—J. C. B. Bickley, Evansville. Third—J. P. Dean, Charleston; S. E. Carter, Seymour. Fourth—M. D. Tackett, Greensburg; Charles Jones, Brookville; A. E. Newlin, Lawrenceburg.
