MR. CUMBACK'S SPEECH

DELIVERED AT AMERICAN MEDICAL COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

A Plea for a Broader View of the Profession of Medicine—Effect of Creed.

The American Medical College held its second commencement last night, in Plymouth Church. The graduates were: Charles Frederick Cleveland, Detroit, James Henry F. Prentice, Reuben Sumner Trask, Eli Vestal Rice, George Washington Harrison, J. Stephen Malloy, Benjamin F. Bye, George Franklin Yeager, Curtis T. Wolford, George Tyrrell Sparks, Alfred Leonidas Maples, Ephraim Darnell O. White, H. S. Tanner, August Marschbach.

There were two selections of dialect poetry by W. W. Pfirmer, of Kentland. The address of the evening was by Hon. Will Cumback, who spoke as follows:

In the invitation to be present and make a short address on this commencement occasion, my esteemed friend, Dr. Cunningham, president, said: "The college is one that embraces within its walls the best of the medical profession of the day, and one that is simply to be gentlemen, honorable and efficient."

He further said, "This is the first college in the world which has for its objective teaching of all medicines on a scientific basis, and which has for its motto a teaching with a view of breaking down all dogmas."

While I know nothing about the science of medicine beyond what a layman can pick up in a lifetime, and was incidentally as much astonished as flattered by the nature of the address, yet the treatment of human life on their merits in such complete accord with my own convictions that I accepted the call of the faculty to perform this service.

As it could not be known to them that I was not a graduate of any sort of school, it affords me some opportunity to say a few words in commendation of your performance. I can only find in generalities and criticisms, and so the purposes of the college are concerned.

Some years ago I heard an able address from that writer, John Clark Ripplah, on the "Epoch of Integration." It proved to be a most interesting and timely address, and a feature of our time. This movement of integration, the lion and the lamb are together, the lion and the lamb are together, the lion and the lamb are together.
