The story of "Madame Sans Gene," in which Kathryn Kidder and the original company come to England's court Monday and Tuesday nights. The story of the adventures of a lady who became a duchess through a gradual promotion of her husband from a sergeant to the position of field marshal under Napoleon. At court she is an object of ridicule because of her husband's manners and inelegant language, and she contrives to offend the sisters of Napoleon, who go to her assistance. She is finally rewarded with a dukedom for her services.

THE CARE OF PARKS. Mary C. Robbins, in the Atlantic. A point to be insisted upon, in conclusion, is that it is not sufficient to purchase land for parks, but that the land must be properly maintained and kept in good condition.

because of the belief that the actions of sleep-walkers are merely the fulfillment of "One of the most narrow escapes she has had, if not the narrowest of all, was on the occasion of the fire at the Grand opera house. She reached the bridge over the creek, crossed it, and then, instead of crossing the structure, made her way down by its side, and, as she descended, she felt a strong current of water. It so happened that the creek was not booming to any great extent just then, and she was able to descend without being seen. After the shock of the water did not fairly waken her, it was some time before she realized her rescue before she entirely regained consciousness.

Miss Rossman has left her room and home at the Grand opera house, and she has taken up her abode in a small room in the city. She has never stopped to do any thing besides the night gown, and has been in the city for some time. It was during the Apache war of 1886, when the soldiers of the United States Army were banding themselves to the United States troops in the Sierra Madre. The Indians, dispersed, were held under guard, and the acting adjutant, notebook in hand, stood making a list of the prisoners. One by one each Indian, his name or her name and description, was called out, and he or she stepped to the other side of a rope stretched between two stakes until the entire band had been enumerated.

"Twenty-nine bucks, forty-six squaws and children, two half-grown boys," the officer said after casting up his figures. "These are all the Indians we have to account for, and they are all here." "Believe me, sir," said the sergeant, "but I believe one of the two boys isn't an Indian."

"Isn't an Indian! What is he, then?" "He's an Apache by his dress, fast enough, but he's an Irishman by his mug and the way he talks. He can't talk Apache, but he can talk Irish, and he can't make out a word of it."

"Bring him to me, and call the interpreter," commanded the adjutant. "The boy, a bright-eyed little fellow with a fair skin, a bright tanned by sun and wind, was brought to the adjutant's tent. The interpreter found no difficulty in talking with him. He reported that the youngster, who spoke both Spanish and the Chiricahua tongue, had stated that he was Santiago McKim, eleven years of age, of San Lorenzo, and that he had been held captive for some time by the Apaches.

His father, an Irishman, married to a Mexican woman, lived on his ranch on the Mirabe river, in northern Mexico, about three miles from San Lorenzo. On the morning of Sept. 11 of the previous year Santiago with his elder brother left the house and went up the valley in search of a burro that had strayed. Although it was on the warpath, the Apaches had massacred recently occurred in various parts of southern New Mexico, it was believed that the settlers along the Mirabe river would be safe.

They had stopped at last and were discussing the matter when they were interrupted by the sound of a rifle shot came to their ears and a moment later they saw a man in a red shirt and a black hat running toward them. He was followed by a man in a blue shirt and a black hat. They were both running toward them. They were both running toward them.

ZERTUCHA, THE TRAITOR

BRIILLIANT MAN LOVING SHOW AND SELF-OUT QUARTERS TO JOIN THE CUBANS

and Betray Their Leader.

New York Journal.

Judas Iscariot—And Judas said unto them, "I have sinned against heaven and man, and I will deliver Him unto you?" And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

"Now, in that he betrayed Him, he gave them a sign saying, 'Whosoever I shall kiss, that same is He; hold Him fast,' and forthwith he came to Jesus and said, 'Hail, Master,' and kissed Him. Then they came and laid hands on Jesus and took Him. A little dreaming that in concealment close by a band of Apaches was debating, 'What parts of the southern country of the United States could form a safe hiding place for the long night marches and frequent halts of the patriots?'

John Churchhill, Duke of Marlborough—John Churchhill, Duke of Marlborough, favored of James II. He was placed at the head of the army sent by James to repel William of Orange, and the night before the battle deserted to William's side and fought with him a victory. Among the other rewards this traitor got was his dukedom. He dickered with James to turn traitor once more, but James could not offer him enough to own him wholly again.

Benedict Arnold—Disappointed in not securing advancement, and jealous of other officers, Benedict Arnold, a native of England, gave his command of West Point, which was one of the key positions in the American fight for independence, and then, through his wife's relatives, bargained with the English to surrender it. His price was £5,000 and a general's commission in the British army.

Maximo Zertucha—A Spanish born, but a graduate of the medical department of the Havana University, he joined the rebel army about nine months ago. His appearance in the rebel camp caused some comment, because he was among those who had been expelled from Havana after Martinez Campos returned to Spain. The Cubans needed a physician and accepted his proposal to go to the island of Cuba. It took him three-quarters of a year to get to the island, and he was shot to pieces in a Spanish ambush.
