HOW UNITED STATES WAS TRICKED BY DON ISIDRO JIMINEZ.

San Domingo is a very beautiful, fruitful island, but not a very big island. In fact, there is not a single man there at a time. This was the conviction of the late President Heurax. His name was Don Juan Isidro Jiminez, and he was a rich merchant, with immense plantations on the island, great ranches in New York and other cities of the world. But every time he landed the island sagged considerably in that direction. This displaced President Heurax's conversation across in the interior, and who rarely went to the coast for fear that the island would capsize with his weight. One day, when the President saw his palace tilted forty-five degrees to leeward and the crockery was rolling off the pantry shelves, he knew that General Jiminez had arrived. He instantly lay down to die.

Now, to have the President of San Domingo invite you to dine is not a pleasant sensation. It produces heart failure. Several important people within the sixteen years of President Heurax's regime had been invited to the executive mansion and died as a result of the invitation.

General Jiminez is a brave man. He accepted the invitation, made his will, wrote a letter to his family in Paris, and mounted a white bull for the purpose of the Dominican White House with true Jeffersonian simplicity. The President opened the door to Jiminez, and Jiminez, with a scansion, as well as business acumen.
