

LOVE IS COLOR BLIND

J. J. JEWETT, THE ENGLISH DESERMONA, AND HER LOBENGULA.

Well-Born Girls Who Have Married Africans, Moors and Indians—Countess a Hottentot.

From Cable Dispatches.

"What will Prince Lobengula do next?" This is a question which Londoners are just now asking, and with very good reason, as any one will admit who has watched this dusky youth's meteoric career during the last few weeks. We see him first at Bloemfontein, where he is about to embark for England. He is attired in all the regalia of an Oriental dandy, and a picturesque, if barbaric, figure he decidedly looks. As fate would have it, an English girl catches sight of him as he loafs one day lazily in the shade, and straightway her heart goes out to him and she determines to marry the dark Adonis. Her name is Florence Kate Jewett, and she is the daughter and heiress of a wealthy mining engineer of Redruth, Cornwall. When a girl makes up her mind to marry a man she generally succeeds, and, though Lobengula was a prince, Miss Florence had little difficulty in getting him to share his heart and his princely title with her. So the two traveled together to London, where the prince had accepted an engagement to appear as the leading attraction at the African exposition at Earl's Court. There he duly appeared before admiring crowds, and not a day passed that Miss Florence did not come to see him. Naturally her friends and relatives, seeing how she was fascinated by the man, became suspicious, yet for a while not one of them had any idea that it was she who had the fancy of an erratic girl. What was their amazement, then, when they learned that she intended to marry this uncouth foreigner, who was daily exhibiting himself for money to a London audience! They pleaded, they remonstrated, they threatened, they reminded her that she was an heiress, and that nobody knew of her going out so principally; they did all in their power to dissuade her, but all their efforts were in vain. The infatuated girl promised to give the matter further consideration, but the next her friends heard was that she had married the prince.

All London—indeed, all England—was amazed at the news, and no wonder. English girls have occasion to make strange matches, but no one before ever heard of an English girl of good birth becoming the wife of an African. Some respectable fathers and mothers of families came to the conclusion that there must be something uncanny about the exhibition in Earl's Court, but certain persons, mainly women, thought that Africa was not so uncouth and uncouth as they were commonly pictured, and the result was that for some days after the marriage the prince's fellow-countrymen found themselves the center of larger crowds than had ever come to see them before. Respectable Englishmen, too, why women should flock around a lot of colored men arrayed in their native costumes, and that they should do so, was a matter of some doubt as to the propriety of any proceeding it very soon makes its views known. The result of its proceedings was that the prince was debarred from seeing the Africans on exhibition.

MEANWHILE THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS LOBENGULA were spending their honeymoon at the quiet little village of Eastbourne, happily enough probably, though the life was certainly one to which the prince was not accustomed. After the applause in the exhibition he must have had a powerful desire rather to brood, since otherwise how are we to account for the fact that only a few days ago he was arrested in London on the charge of abducting respectable white women? Nice conduct for a newly married man. His apologists may maintain that the antics were due to his polygamous ancestors, but the magistracy before him considered this as any extenuation of the offense. Lobengula's defense was that he knew the women, but as they screamed and ran away when he approached them this explanation was not satisfactory. He was, however, bound the prisoner over in recognition for six months and told him to keep the peace, otherwise he would get into serious difficulties.

Curious as it may seem, European aristocracy has set the example of the prince's assorted unions. The daughter of Lord St. Vincent, a singularly lovely girl, married an individual named Dyer, a half-breed of colossal wealth, the son of the Begum or native Queen of the East Indian State of Bombay. The daughter of the Countess of Ellenborough and the French Princesses in the Tour d'Avignon, the greatest of the world, like so many others of the sort, turned out unhappy and culminated in a separation. His wife, who, prior to his desertion, married the third Lord Forester, died about three years ago.

Lady Hester Stanhope, a grand-aunt of Lord Rosebery and a niece of William Pitt, died as the wife of an Arab sheik at Damascus. Among the English who have followed her example and who have been married to Oriental gables by Arab husbands have been the Countess of Ellenborough and the French Princesses in the Tour d'Avignon, the greatest of the world, like so many others of the sort, turned out unhappy and culminated in a separation. His wife, who, prior to his desertion, married the third Lord Forester, died about three years ago.

One titled English woman filled her royal Egyptian harem in the 13 minutes. The story has been remembered for the singular chain of circumstances connected therewith. The lady in question was a near relative of the Marquis of Huntley. She was on the point of becoming the wife of Mustafa Pasha, the premier of Egypt. She refused him, however, on discovering that the reason why he always kept his right hand gloved was to conceal an ugly looking semi-circular scar, the result of a bite which he had received from the former Minister of Finance, the Pasha Sadyk.

A BLACK PEERESS. Thus, the dowager Countess of Stamford, a peeress of the British realm, and entitled to be kissed by the sovereign, on the cheek when she attends court at Buckingham Palace, is a coal black Hottentot. Had it not been for a little mistake in the arrival in this world of her grandson, a very dark-colored mulatto would be at present peer of the realm as Earl of Stamford and Lord Grey of Groby, the titles of the late earl, a person who had abandoned his calling and had taken to squatting in the wilds of South Africa, descending to his nephew, who was then earning a comfortable living at a school at Trinidad.

An English woman of excellent birth married the late Sheik of Wey, hereditary ecclesiastical chief of the Mohammedan Church in Morocco, and her son is the present ruler of that kingdom. Her husband, but she was by no means the only principal one and enjoyed power over all the others.

THE NEW YORK STORE ESTABLISHED 1853 SOLE AGENTS FOR BUTTERICK PATTERNS

An Event Extraordinary Great Cash Sale In order to comply with the provisions as to settling the estate of the late President of this Company we find it necessary to AT ONCE turn many thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise into ready cash. Therefore, we will start TO-MORROW—MONDAY—MORNING AT EIGHT O'CLOCK, at the very outset of the fall business, with new, fresh, reasonable goods this GREAT MONEY RAISING SALE.

Nearly every one in central Indiana is familiar with the many successful sales the New York Store has had in past years, but it is our intention to make this sale the greatest and most successful of any we have previously held. An opportunity like this for purchasing entirely new and seasonable merchandise at specially reduced prices CAN SCARCELY BE OVERESTIMATED. As is well known no other store in the State of Indiana approaches the New York Store in magnitude, either in vast amount and variety of stocks carried or in facilities for transacting an enormous business in the most modern and up-to-date manner. We will not attempt to congest our regular store business by crowding this enormous movement into a few days' time or a few advertisements, but will systematically place before the public from time to time a series of seasonable merchandise inducements which will include EACH AND EVERYONE OF THE FORTY-FIVE DEPARTMENTS IN OUR STORE. MAKING THIS FURTHERANCE OF OUR BUSINESS DUTY MEMORABLE IN INDIANAPOLIS AS A BOON TO EVERY CITIZEN OF THIS AND SURROUNDING TOWNS. Furthermore, we intend that to-morrow's business, the first day of this great cash sale, shall pass the highwater mark reached by any of our previous successful sales. Arrangements for this sale have been made on such a scale that you will be equally well served, whether wishing to purchase the slightest common necessity or to participate in the greatest bargains offered. OUR ARMY OF SALES PEOPLE HAS BEEN LARGELY REINFORCED IN EVERY DEPARTMENT AND WE SHALL MAKE EVERY EFFORT TO WAIT ON EVERYBODY PROMPTLY. These few items simply represent hundreds of equally as good values throughout the store. Read every item mentioned below.
