P. D. ARMOUR, JR., DEAD SON OF THE CHICAGO MULTI-MILLIONAIRE PORK PACKER.

Died Suddenly of Congestion of the Lungs at a Winter Resort in Southern California. PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 27.—News has been received of the sudden death of Philip D. Armour, jr., at Monte Cito, near Santa Barbara, Young Armour was ill but twenty-four hours and his death was due to congestion of the lungs. He was thirty-one years old. He left Chicago three weeks ago in excellent health. A special train was engaged to take relatives and friends from Pasadena to Santa Barbara. On the advice of his physician, P. D. Armour, sr., father of the young man, did not go, his health being such that a ride in the car would have been fatal.

His death was a surprise, as it was known that when he left for the coast he was in the best of health. A telegram from a member of the party that accompanied Young Armour from Chicago a few weeks ago, when he went to California to join his father, confirmed the information to J. Ogden Armour, a brother. At first J. Ogden Armour was inclined to believe there was an error in the report of the sudden death of his brother, as the name signed to the telegram was not that of a member of the family, but confirming the death of Young Armour, jr., with his wife and two children, aged seven and five, went to California two weeks ago, the double purpose of their visit being apprehension for the health of Mr. Armour's oldest child, Philip D. Armour, III, and a desire to be near Philip D. Armour, sr., who had preceded them with his wife a fortnight or more ago.

Philip D. Armour, sr., whose health is not of the best, has a residence in Pasadena, and his son went to Santa Barbara, fifteen miles distant, believing the climate there would do him good. He traveled with Mr. Armour, jr., leased a winter residence, and so far as reports go, at no time was ill while there until the sudden malady which ended last night in his death. Mrs. J. Ogden Armour and her children are in Pasadena. Mr. Armour, jr., was thirty-one years old and was born in Milwaukee, Wis., but when a child he was sent to Chicago. He attended Phillips Andover College and later Yale, but after two years left the military service and returned to Europe. When he was barely of age, he married the daughter of John T. Lester. Mr. Armour was a member of the Chicago, Calumet, Athletic and the Whiston Golf Clubs. He was one of the members of Armour & Co., the other two members being his father and brother. He was not an athlete, but always had reasonably good health, and his sudden death will cause a great surprise to all who know him.

Incidents of the War. III Feeling Between Surgeons and Female Nurses—A Scilich Lord. According to a private letter from Sir William MacCormac, president of the Royal College of Surgeons, there is an excessive ill-feeling between the British medical officers in South Africa and the female nurses at the base hospitals, some of the former urging the sole employment of male orderlies. On the whole, however, especially at the front, the medical arrangements seem to be giving the greatest satisfaction.

A curious exception of the general patriotism which prevails among the British nobility of all classes occurred the other day. When the Gloucestershire Volunteers respectfully asked Lord Sherborne for a two weeks' leave of absence, he replied that if the people of England wanted rifle ranges they must pay for them.

The last detachment of the infantry section of the London Volunteers, numbering 124 men, were entrained at London yesterday for Southampton, where they later embarked for the Cape. The route from Wellington Barracks to Nine Elms Station was thronged with cheering spectators, but not in the same degree as on previous occasions. The order of march was undisturbed. The Lord Mayor and sheriffs accompanied the troops to Southampton. The infantry section will leave Feb. 2.

A new fourteen-pounder semi-automatic rapid-fire gun, made by the Vickers-Maxim Company for the British navy department, was tested last week before United States Naval Attaché Lieut. Commander Colwell. The order of the gun was 1,000 rounds were fired satisfactorily and 2,500 feet initial velocity was secured with seventeen shots. The gun will now be shipped to the United States.

Only a few London waterers are drawing pay during the war. The new Hippodrome, however, which has been opened in Leicester Square, seems to have met the popular taste and is crowded nightly. A British officer at the front writes: "An orderly was bringing some water to a wounded man lying on the ground near me. The orderly, however, could not find the man, and he said: 'Take it to my pal over there.' I was glad to see the orderly bring this one can of water, and when he returned I said: 'The men are splendid.'"

Professor Goldwin Smith writes to the London Speaker one of the most misleading letters which could possibly be put before the public. He says that the name of the British Empire is a name; really they were striking the American conscience, as there are few names which are so sacred as that of the British Empire. The name of the British Empire is a name; really they were striking the American conscience, as there are few names which are so sacred as that of the British Empire.

The London Saturday Review strikes a bold note of defiance of the majority of the British people. It declares that the "general feeling in America is by no means with us in this matter (the Boer war) and that we are better informed units may think."

ABLE REPLY TO PINGREE CHARLES T. YERKES OPPOSES MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

He Contends the Best Interests of the People Would Be Served by Creating Political Machines. CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—At the monthly dinner of the Marquette Club to-night Gov. Hazen S. Pingree, of Michigan, and Charles T. Yerkes, of Chicago, took opposite sides in the discussion of the subject "Municipal Ownership and Operation of Street Railways." Seats for about two hundred guests had been provided, but so great was the interest manifested twice as many were provided when the speaking began. Governor Pingree was the first speaker. His address was in line with his well-known views on the subject. Prof. J. Lawrence Laughlin, of the University of Chicago, followed Governor Pingree, taking ground also in favor of municipal ownership.

Chas. T. Yerkes, the street-railway magnate, closed the discussion, speaking against municipal ownership. He said: "There can be no doubt in the unbiased mind that if the great corporations of any large community were run by the government, whether it be municipal or otherwise, that a great political machine would be formed, and that it would almost be an impossibility to disrupt that machine. The number of persons who would be subservient to the leaders could only be estimated by the courage for inquiry that would be contained in the minds of those leaders. The merit system, if fairly established, would give to some extent an intelligence in the operating department, but we all know, particularly in Chicago, that civil service is practically a myth."

The tendency of municipal politics toward jobbery, trade-trading and absolute dishonesty is not to be denied, but even were the civil-service law properly enforced the service would be inferior to that of a private corporation. It is simply impossible for any industry to be carried on successfully without its head being an intelligent person, free from any political affiliations or other considerations that would make an impossibility to disrupt that machine. The number of persons who would be subservient to the leaders could only be estimated by the courage for inquiry that would be contained in the minds of those leaders. The merit system, if fairly established, would give to some extent an intelligence in the operating department, but we all know, particularly in Chicago, that civil service is practically a myth.

Mr. Yerkes, referring to the benefits that electric traction has conferred on the public of the United States, said that the working classes from the crowded areas to healthy suburban homes, said: "Can any one believe that under municipal control these great extensions of lines could have been consummated? Experience teaches us that where the municipality has the control of the street-railroads they have always declined to make such extensions. The fact is, a municipal ownership and the enormous expenditures sufficient to produce these results, and I believe it is your opinion, as well as mine, that if the street-railroads of the past fifteen years the mileage would not have been one-quarter of what it is at the present. But, absent that, I claim that municipal ownership is contrary to the principles of our free government and detrimental to the growth of our country and our progress as a free people. Let me ask, what has built up this country to the condition it is in to-day? Is it not that every man, woman and child who has the means is able to invest the product of his labor in the purchase of property? Let the corporations deal fairly with the municipality and the municipality will be the beneficiary of the progress we need and not municipal ownership."

Two Big Concerns at War. Steel Companies Cutting the Price of Tank Plates. PITTSBURGH, Jan. 27.—The Post will say to-morrow: "Slashing of prices has been started by two of the largest steel and iron concerns in the country. The cuts are affecting but two of the products and there is danger of others being disturbed. It started with one class of material and a second has followed in sympathy. The firms to the contest for business are the Carnegie Steel Company, Ltd., and Jones & Laughlin. As a rule better results are obtained when the price is cut on tank and boiler plates. One month ago tank plates sold at $25.00 a ton. Now they are selling at $45, a cut of $17.50. Boiler plates readily brought $22.50, and since the decline in tank material started it has reached the $18.00 mark. It is possible that it will ultimately follow closely in the footsteps of the tank product. As yet no other steel products have been touched. The establishment of the price and as both are determined, with plenty of financial and other facilities, the steel industry will be watched with interest in iron and steel circles."
