

New York Store

Established 1853. Sole Agents Butterick Patterns. Ladies' Patent Leather Shoes.....

Patent leather is pretty for street, theater, church and business wear. We think the desire for dressy patent leather is founded on good judgment.

Pettis Dry Goods Co. Sizes 3 to 7; widths A to D. A high-grade shoe at a very low price.

Indiana Dental College

Department of Dentistry. For all kinds of dental work. The fees are to cover the costs only.

OUR Large Stock and Large Business enables us to undersell all others.

GEO. J. MAROTTI, 22 to 28 East Wash. St. Second largest shoe store in the world.

AMUSEMENTS.

"A Guilty Mother" at the Park. "A Guilty Mother" reappeared at the Park Theater, yesterday, for an engagement which will last the week out, with daily matinees.

Notes of the Stage. William A. McConnell is traveling in aid of the sprightly farce, "Mammy's Awkins," which is coming to English's in the near future.

The Wine, Woman and Song Company, with a comparatively clean performance and an excellent olio, continues to entertain Empire Theater patrons.

Pinero's great comedy, "The Magistrate," which is being prepared for next week by the Grand stock company, is said to be making a remarkably fine showing in the daily rehearsals this week.

The announcement that Edward J. Morgan is to be supported in "The Only Way" at English's next Wednesday and Thursday nights by a large company, including the Stoddard, indicates that the production will be notable.

Charles Frohman was so successful with Leo Dittichstein, whom he procured from the ranks of Heinrich Conrod's Irving Place Theater Company of German actors, that he has made a second requisition and obtained Miss Fiske Collier, who was in Maude Adams's support in "The Alchemist."

"A Female Drummer," with a cast of forty people, including George Richards, William Newman, Jr., Tuesday night by a really brilliant New York clubmen, while her sister Gertrude is also having trouble, since the version of "Becky Sharp" she is presenting under the title "Fanny Hill," has just been legally attacked by Langdon Mitchell as an infringement of the play "Becky Sharp," which he adapted for Mrs. Fiske from Thackeray's great novel.

The engagement of Herrmann the Great and the Five Noses (musical artists) at English's Opera House to-night and to-morrow night, with a matinee to-morrow, promises to be notable, judging from the demand for seats at the three performances. The present Herrmann is claimed to be even greater than his uncle Alexander in several branches of the magic art, while the Noses have a reputation for ability that is too well known to need repetition.

PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

Otto L. Kipp left yesterday for Dallas, Tex. Miss Claypool is visiting friends in Green-castle.

Mrs. Harry S. New will return from a visit to Detroit to-day. Mrs. J. H. Lindley will spend the winter in Southern California.

Miss Stella Walcott will arrive Saturday to visit friends in the city. Miss Maud Elliott will leave soon for New York, to spend several weeks.

Miss Helen McKay has gone to Chicago, where she will attend the Art League. Miss Fay McCrea, of Cleveland, will arrive next week to visit Miss Marie Hill.

Miss Nellie Birk has gone to Delaware, O., where she will attend Delaware College. Miss Irene L. Test, of Council Bluffs, Ia., is with Miss Esther Haughey, at the Victoria.

Miss Jane Williams entertained at luncheon yesterday in honor of Miss Annie Gaines Dyer.

Mrs. Katharine Hullard will leave this morning for St. Joseph, Mo., to visit relatives. Mrs. Alice Wheeler, of Peoria, and Mrs. James Hamilton have returned from Lake

STREETS NOT STRAIGHT

A PECULIAR CONDITION BROUGHT OUT IN A LAWSUIT. It is Not Known What Will Be Done in the Matter—Various Court Cases.

The suit of Fred Brandt against Mary A. Connor and others, in Judge Leathers's court yesterday, developed a matter affecting the proposed subdivision of Pleasant street between Olive and Laurel streets. Brandt and the defendants have adjoining property, separated by a fence.

A contention arose over the position of this fence, Brandt claiming his property was encroached upon two inches at one end of his lot and seven inches at the other. The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication.

To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property. The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

STREETS NOT STRAIGHT

A PECULIAR CONDITION BROUGHT OUT IN A LAWSUIT. It is Not Known What Will Be Done in the Matter—Various Court Cases.

The suit of Fred Brandt against Mary A. Connor and others, in Judge Leathers's court yesterday, developed a matter affecting the proposed subdivision of Pleasant street between Olive and Laurel streets. Brandt and the defendants have adjoining property, separated by a fence.

A contention arose over the position of this fence, Brandt claiming his property was encroached upon two inches at one end of his lot and seven inches at the other. The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication.

To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property. The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

STREETS NOT STRAIGHT

A PECULIAR CONDITION BROUGHT OUT IN A LAWSUIT. It is Not Known What Will Be Done in the Matter—Various Court Cases.

The suit of Fred Brandt against Mary A. Connor and others, in Judge Leathers's court yesterday, developed a matter affecting the proposed subdivision of Pleasant street between Olive and Laurel streets. Brandt and the defendants have adjoining property, separated by a fence.

A contention arose over the position of this fence, Brandt claiming his property was encroached upon two inches at one end of his lot and seven inches at the other. The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication.

To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property. The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

The defendant declared the property was rightly divided, and, failing to compromise, the matter was laid before Judge Leathers for adjudication. To satisfy the court that there was infringement of property County Surveyor Coyner, H. B. Fatout and a civil engineer of Noblesville were asked to survey the property.

The result of their survey was the finding that the subdivision was right and as much property as the plat book specified was contained in the boundary lines, and that the outside streets were run on proper lines. But the inside streets were not all straight, some of them having "ripples" over at the corners.

JOHN C. HERETH DEAD

HE HAD BEEN A WELL-KNOWN BUSINESS MAN OF THE CITY. A royal good time was enjoyed by the members of the Indianapolis Aquatic Club on a party of their friends on a night on the houseboat at Broad Ripple. A clam bake was the drawing card, but there were other features of the programme which were interesting. The affair was strictly fraternal in character and it is gratifying that the ladies who usually aid in making the gatherings more interesting were hardly missed during the evening. Mrs. Hereth was one of the finest of the kind that was ever given in Indianapolis.

John C. Hereth, of 147 North New Jersey street, who was ill for many weeks, died yesterday morning of uric acid poisoning. The funeral will be held to-morrow from the family residence.

Mr. Hereth was born in Germany in 1857 and came to this country in 1882, residing with his parents at Baltimore, Md., until he was grown, when he came West, settling at Madison. He came to Indianapolis in 1881 and was in the harness business, in which he continued until a few years ago, when his son Ad Hereth succeeded him. He was one of the early Methodists here and was one of the founders of the Grace M. E. Church at Madison. He leaves a wife and nine children.

He was a well-known educator—father of Dr. Potter. The Rev. Ludlow Day Potter, president of the Glendale, O., College since 1885, and well known throughout this State, died yesterday at Glendale after an illness of some weeks. Mr. Potter had been in failing health for some years. He was born at New Providence, N. J., in 1832, and entered as a sophomore at Princeton College in 1853, graduating in 1854. During the two years next following he taught languages and mathematics in a classical school at Princeton, N. J., and in 1856 entered Princeton College as a theological student, graduating in 1856. He came to Indianapolis in 1857 and was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Brookville, where he remained for five years. In 1858 he was elected principal of the Whiteoak Presbyterian Academy, which position he held for three years, removing then to Glendale, Ind., where he was assistant to Dr. Monfort, then president of the college, until 1866, when he succeeded Dr. Monfort as president, and occupied that post until his death.

Mr. Potter leaves five children, Mrs. Strong, of Great Barrington, Mass.; the Rev. Charles Potter, Glasgow, Del.; John Potter, of Cleveland, O.; Miss Mary Potter, a teacher in the Glendale school, and Dr. Theodore Potter, of this city.

Miss Harriet E. Galbraith Dead. Miss Harriet E. Galbraith, who lived with her mother at 1601 North Alabama street, died suddenly yesterday morning after what was thought to be only a slight illness of several days' duration. She was in the schoolroom yesterday morning, and about 11 o'clock was overcome and was taken to her home in a carriage. Upon arrival there she was able only to ask for a doctor, who responded at once and saw there was no chance for her recovery.

Death of Mrs. Hale. Mrs. Tillie Hale, wife of James Hale, died at her residence, 329 North Illinois street, last night, shortly after 12 o'clock.

Doesn't Need a Guardian. W. A. Stage knows enough to always vote the Republican ticket. A petition for the appointment of a guardian for William A. Stage in the Circuit Court yesterday turned out to be excellent fighting ground for several attorneys. Stage is the son of an army surgeon who died several years ago, and is paralyzed, the upper part of his body being entirely useless. After his father's death his aunt, Mrs. Halstead, acted as his guardian until he gained his majority. He owns four houses and lots in Martin-dale avenue, and when the property re-verted to him when he became of age, to settle it, Mr. Halstead induced him to deed it to her. In return, she made her will so that the property with her own, would be divided to her children.

This arrangement was objected to by neighbors and Charles Henderson filed a petition for the appointment of a guardian. A guardian was appointed to see that the property was secured and bound up in such a manner that Stage could not dispose of it in an agreement with any one at this point and Dr. Robert W. Long was appointed guardian.

During the proceedings, witnesses of the petitioner were introduced in an attempt to show that Stage was easily influenced by others, applying to him the testimony of the deed of the property to his aunt. Stage has never had educational advantages but has been reading and studying what he reads. L. P. Harlan appeared as Stage's attorney, and to refute the charge that his client did not have the use of his own will, he resorted to the novel method of bringing points into court.

Evidence was introduced to show that without the aid of his relatives, including his aunt with whom he lived, he was unable to read and understand what Attorney Harlan had. Halstead placed upon the stand. She testified that Stage would spread a newspaper out on a stand and by looking over it could explain any article in it. Then Mr. Harlan told the jury that Stage was a Republican, which was verified by the aunt. It was also shown that he was persistent in his faith, and the attorney asked the jury to increase a man certainly had a mind of his own, when he would read for himself and without any aid from his relatives, and that he was a contrary influence, break away from the doctrine taught from childhood up to the time of his majority.

EMANCIPATION DAY. It Was Celebrated with a Picnic at Greenwood Park. Martin R. Delaney, No. 20, G. A. R., held a picnic and jubilee yesterday at Greenwood Park in celebrating the anniversary of the emancipation proclamation. The heavy rain in the early part of the day had a bad effect on the attendance, but the programme arranged was gone through with. In the afternoon speeches were made by ex-Governor Taylor, Chas. W. Bookwater and Rev. Dr. Lucas.

In the evening, when the weather had cleared off somewhat, the crowd was augmented greatly. The speaker, who was a first speaker was called, there were several hundred people in the stand. Gurky Brower, George Knox, James Shulton and Rev. Charles Newton occupied the evening by short talks.

Col. R. A. Black, of Greenfield, the attorney of Judge Black, of the Supreme Court, was severely injured by a fall from a Washington and Pennsylvania streets by being knocked from one of the Greenfield cars. In company with several friends he ran to catch an outgoing car, being unable to get the attention of the conductor to have the car stopped. He jumped on the steps on the inside of the track and was knocked off by one of the posts. He was semi-conscious when picked up and carried to Huder's drug store. He was taken