The members of both families interfered and peace reigned for a short time. The quarrel was renewed a little later. Frank Smith went behind his bed and took down a rifle, which was always kept loaded. Robert ran from the house and went to the home of a neighbor named Stevens and asked to borrow a shotgun for the purpose of killing weasels. With the shotgun he returned to the house for his wife and children, and as he approached the door Frank Smith shot at him with the He returned the fire with the shotgun, the charge spreading and part of it striking Frank Smith in the abdomen and the other in the arm. Robert outside got his wife and children about him, walked with them to the home of Mr. Stevens, where the shotgun was left upon the doorstep, and after bidding them good-bye left. The police here were asked yesterday to watch for him: Coroner Brayton said last night his verdict would be that Robert Smith acted in self-defense, his dead brother having first shot at him and having previously threatened to kill him.

ALOON KEEPERS WHO FAILED TO ACT IN PROMPT MANNER.

What an Investigation of the Records in the Auditor's and Controller's Offices Shows.

An investigation of the city liquor lifice and the state license record in the county auditor's office shows that certain saloonists have been favored by the city administration in that they have been allowed to continue business without renewof gross negligence. The fact that William Miller, who has a saloon at 27 East Court saloonists were from a week to a month behind with their licenses, leaves the con-

the present local campaign. He was a Democrat in national politics until free silver became an issue and then he voted for McKinley, yet supported the local Democratic ticket. This fall, however, he saw fit to change his politics locally and this is said to have incensed the Democratic managers of the city administration. Charles Polster, representing the Democrats, is said to have demanded $50 from Miller as an assessment for the support of the Democratic ticket. Miller refused to pay the assessment and was arrested for running his saloon without license. His license had lapsed two days. He was arrested on Saturday, Sept. 14, and released the following Monday without a trial. He had paid for his license before his arrest, but because the county treasurer's office was not open at the time his license could they were delinquent. The records in the city controller's office show that many city licenses were renewed long before new State licenses were taken This is accounted for by the city seeking revenue. The city received the payment for the license before the State granted any, placing the fees at the immediate disposal of the city administration. This practice has been followed, and while it is said to not be illegal, the city has realized an immediate profit. Generally, the licenses expired and were renewed on the same day both in the auditor's and given why all of these delinquents were permitted to run their saloons unmolested while Miller, less guilty than the great majority, was singled out as a law violator, unless it was discrimination because of his refusal to pay a campaign assessment. The city employs a license inspector to see that renewals are made promptly. ASSESSING SALOON KEEPERS.

They Are Required to Pay by the Democratic Committee.

It is no longer a secret that the saloon keepers are being assessed by the Democratic city committee a stipulated sum for campaign purposes. While the saloon men are reticent about discussing the assessments, many acknowledge that such assessments are being made. The names of the saloonists are kept in a book and the amount they donate is checked opposite their names. From what could be learned by a canvass of saloons the down-town places are being assessed $50 each and the saloons outside the business district $25. Much-Needed Addition to the Local Postoffice-More Free Delivery for This County.

The people of Indianapolis will rejoice to learn that within a short time they will not be compelled to buy stamps in one building, go into the outer air and enter another building to mail their letters. This since winter is not far away. The accomplishment of this public blessing is due to the efforts of Representative Overstreet, begun several months ago and crowned with success on the occasion of his recent visit to Washington. Mr. Overstreet has succeeded in getting from the Treasury allow the owners of the site of the present between the main building of the postoffice and the mailing department, such building to be rented to the government

The general public is scarcely aware of the growth of this branch of the postal business in the short time in which it has been operated. A visit to rural delivery headquarters, in the Majestic building, is calculated to open the eyes of the uninitiated. This department is in charge of Frank M. Dice, superintendent of rural free delivery for the entire State, and he and his corps of assistants require four large rooms in which to transact their business. Mr. Dice was, until recently, ompelled to occupy a stuffy little room on the third floor of the postoffice bullding, in which he and his assistants had to elbow and proceed with great care when they desired to enter or leave the office.
