In his investigation he learned that he had not been the only one who had sent the young missionary money; that the architect and the lighter captain had also been contributing liberally. They, also, expected to marry her. The three got together and by comparing notes discovered that they had given the woman $1,800. Hicks then sought the woman and asked what she meant. She said she was sorry and asked his forgiveness and further stated that she supposed he would not marry her after what had happened. He told her she had judged correctly and then took the first boat for the United States. His contribution was nothing to what the others had made and he is now satisfied with his experience. He says the lighter captain even made the woman his savings bank and at one time had $600 desited with her. The woman had promsed to marry each of her suitors.

HOTEL LOBBY GLEANINGS

CHARLES P. WALKER JOURNEYS TO THIS CITY FROM MECCA.

The Latter Is a Small Town in Indiana That Has No Saloons-Other Hotel Visitors.

There was a man at the Occidental Hotel last night who hails from an Indiana town in which a saloon is not allowed. There is no ordinance against saloons in the town, but by common consent no property owner will sell to a man who proposes to establish a liquor resort. The town is called Mecca and it is located on Raccoon creek, a rippling little stream that traverses one of the picturesque valleys of Parke county The man from Mecca is Charles P. Walker, manager of the Mecca clay works, an establishment that employs eighty-five men and is building four more kilns so that when they are finished the works will employ more than a hundred men.

that he is almost persuaded to join the party of progress and prosperity. He said last night that in all his thirty years' business career last year was the most pros- the city, having attended the Republican perous he has had. The town got its name from the old Mecca mills that were established in the little valley many years ago by the McCune family. The mills are picturesquely situated on one side of the stream and the new town on the other. There is a saloon on the mill side but no groggery in the town. Mecca was laid out and platted into town lots a few years ago when William E. Dee, of Chicago, established the clay works there. While not especially a temperance man, Mr. Dee thought he could see where a town without a saloon would be a sort of ideal place and with this fact in mind he declined to buy a foot of ground unless the people who sold to him would make a contract to sell no ground to persons desiring to establish a saloon. These contracts have been successful. The clay works flourished, Mr. Dee found his Mecca there and the village The citizens of Mecca seemed to pride themselves on the fact that they hailed from a temperance town. One day, however, there was amazement written on many countenances when it was learned that a saloon was to be estab-It was to be started in a building that had been erected on ground sold before the Dee contract went into effect. An gitation was at once started against the doon and a man was found who would buy out the owner. The citizens made up sum and paid the difference between what the owner paid for the property and what he received for it. Since that time there has been no liquor establishment in Mecca and the locality might well be termed Peaceful Valley. Mr. Walker says the state geologist has declared the valley to be the richest locality in the State for clay products. Besides there is mining in the neighborhood. The Mecca mine, the Rock Run mine and the New Century mine are located within a short distance of

Be Established.

"The Legislature ought to appropriate money and establish a forestry reservation or State park," said Sam P. Burkholder, president of the Indiana Wholesale Hardwood Lumber Dealers' Association, at the and has since affiliated with the Republican Grand Hotel, last night. The hardwood party. dealers will hold their annual meeting in this city on Jan. 21, and Mr. Burkholder will bring up the question of a forestry reservation at this meeting. The lumber dealers will also be addressed by Secretary Freeman, of the Board of Forestry. Mr. Burkholder says that New York, New Jersey and other Eastern States are establishing State parks, and he thinks Indiana chase a large tract of land which is plentifully timbered with old trees and preserve these forests so that other generations may know what kind of timber once grew so luxuriantly in Indiana. Mr. Burkholder says he knows of a tract of land in this reservation purposes if it could be bought. This is a tract owned by John Lusk, of Parke county. There are about 1,100 acres in the tract, and the ground includes Bloomingdale Glens, one of the picturesque spots in Indiana. The original Indiana forest trees are growing on this land, Mr. Burkholder says. Mr. Epperson is here to complete his annual report, which will be placed in the hands of the state geologist within a few weeks. Mr. Epperson says considerable trouble was experienced during the recent cold snap on account of the shortage of cars at some of the mines. The inspector says his report has not advanced far enough towards completion to warrant an accurate statement as to its details at this time. He is of opinion, however, that the tonnage of coal mined last year was in excess of that mined during the year 1900. Between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 of coal were mined in Indiana in During that year thirty-three new mines were opened in the State and during the year just closed these mines added to the product. The report will also show the amount of wages paid to miners for the year. Mr. Epperson said he could give no figures as to wages at present. The report will also show the number of strikes that have been in progress. It is understood by the inspectors that the mines at Cannelton, where strikes went into effect, have been abandoned Success of the Love Feast.

Republican politicians are gratified over the success of the love feast that was held here Tuesday. They say that in point of interest it was one of the best ever held in the State. establish a camp of instruction here, General Otis said he could not say. He and Major Murray went out to the arsenal yesterday and spent a short time in the grounds. They will make a thorough in-spection to-day. General Otis thinks Indianapolis is a pretty good point at which to establish troops on account of the railroad facilities. In commenting on the situation in the Philippines, with which he is familiar on account of long service in the islands, General Otis said: "I think everything is working favorably there. It is going to take some time to engraft our civilization on to those people. I think our civil commission there is making fair progress. The people must be patient. There are some able men among the Filipinos-

Illinois and Washington streets working | men who are working hard in the interests of their people." General Otis looks upon Aguinaldo as a sharp, shrewd, cunning man. He is not a man of education, but a man of a good deal of personality. "He has had a great deal of influence with the ignorant masses," said General Otls, "but his influence has departed. The great difficulty we are having in the Philippines now is the difficulty that was experienced by the Spanish regime. This is the trouble with the outlaw bands. In fact, Spain nad a great deal more trouble than we are having. The people of the Philippine islands say to-day that they have more liberty now than they ever had. Probably for a long time we will have those little outbursts from the outlaw on the island, but ney will amount to but little."

Asked as to his views of the opportunities of American capital, push and energy in the islands, General Otis said: "I believe in advancing the Filipinos and giving them the first chance, but, of course, they will have to have American capital to aid them." General ods says there are many men among the Filipino people who have been educated at the University of Manila, an institution of high class. It has its law, scientific and medical departments, and is

FIRE IN IRVINGTON.

A Loss of $4,500 to the Residence of George M. Billings.

The residence of George M. Billings, in rvington, was destroyed early yesterday morning by fire, the occupants barely escaping with their lives. The house is located at 5781 Oak avenue and is one of the Parry addition houses erected several years ago. The buildings are very close together and Irvington citizens had hard work to save the adjoining houses.

The fire originated from the furnace, in which gas was burned. It is supposed the gas came up very high about 3 o'clock and the overheated furnace set fire to the lower floor. A son, Fred Billings, came home at midnight, but did not notice any high pressure of gas in the furnace. About 4 clock Mr. Billings was awakened by a rackling sound. On rushing down stairs and opening the cellar door he was met by a burst of flames, which burned him badly about the face. He gave the alarm and the family had barely time to escape in their night clothes before the whole interior of the house collapsed. Nothing was saved except a few chairs, which were near the entrance to the house. A daughter, who was at a dance in the city, lost al her wardrobe except the party gown which she wore: The whole loss is estimated at $4,500, with an insurance of $2,800, The residence of P. N. Gallahee narrowly escaped burning also. Its contents were carried out and the fire fighters hearly gave up hope. The house was badly scorched.

PRESIDENT PARRY.

Residents Along the Proposed Route Anxious that Work Shall Begin at Once.

Scores of letters are being received every week by D. M. Parry, president of the Indianapolis Southern Railroad Company, requesting information as to when the work of construction will commence and urging the necessity of immediate action. To all of these Mr. Parry has replied that he is naturally more anxious than the residents of the towns along the line of the proposed road for an opportunity to begin opera tions, but as yet the city authorities have taken no action, and until they do nothing

Many of the letters received set out at length the advantages which the building of the Southern will confer upon the various towns along its route. The town of Bedford, in particular, wants the road badly, and city officers and leading manufacturers have written to the president of the company. Bedford is the center of the great stone industry of the State, and its facilities for shipping the famous Bedford stone are not as extensive as desired. If the Southern is constructed Bedford will be in a position to place carloads of stone in Indianapolis cheaper than they were ever before obtained here.

Bloomington wants the road built, not only as a help to its stone industry, but for other reasons. The town is the seat of the State University. Four times a year 1,000 students travel back and forth from their homes to the town. At present the Monon railroad is the only line passing through the town, and in consequence the railroad facilities for this heavy passenger traffic is necessarily limited. Should the Southern be built through Bloomington, as is now contemplated, hundreds of students will receive quicker and more satisfactory

Mitchell is anxious to have the road, and the owners of the large cement works there have communicated with Mr. Parry in regard to the matter. From other smaller towns letters have been numerous. Some desire the road for purposes of shipping coal; some to enable them to get a better market for their agricultural products and fruits, and some that they may have an opportunity of transferring their trade from Cincinnati to Indianapolis. Mr. Parry says that the financing of the road has been completed, and that there is plenty of money in the treasury of the company. Should the franchise be granted within a few weeks Mr. Parry states that the road could be completed and in opera-
