BETTER WHEN OLD

Per Capita Circulation Now Greater than Ever Before.

New York Financier.

The per capita circulation of money in the United States on Dec. 1, according to treasury estimates, was $29.52, which was, needless to say, the highest figure on record.

The total circulation is now nearly $2,352,750,000, against a little more than $2,000,000,000 on Nov. 1, one month previous.

The increase during the month was $352,750,000, of which about $10,000,000 was in the form of gold coin and certificates and $342,750,000 in national bank notes.

The circulation of the latter has now reached $17,362,992, and at the present rate of expansion will soon pass the $1,000,000,000 mark.

The general stock of money in circulation is now $1,422,552,500, and this forms a basis equivalent to 47 per cent. of the stock of money in the national treasury.

A very good indication of the general state of prosperity is afforded in the increased use of fractional currency, which is now in circulation to the amount of $6,082,883.

One month ago the total was a million less, and two months ago it was a million less.

The increase in twelve months amounts to 30.7 per cent., whereas the increase in all forms of money has been less than 10 per cent.

Increased subsidiary silver shows prosperity only in that it reflects a more active silver trade, and this, of course, depends on the general employment of the people.

Some very good judges of material conditions place quite a much reliance on the fact that the fractional currency is increasing so rapidly.

Unless, however, Congress acts with promptness, the amount of subsidiary silver that may be reached to $100,000,000, and that sum, counting treasury holdings, has already been reached.

The secretary of the treasury, in his report issued last week, called attention to this fact and recommended that Congress should take prompt action to extend the limit of coinage.

It would seem that this is a matter which cannot by any means be postponed as a political question, in view of the fact that the limit of coinage is now being reached.
