MOVEMENTS OF STEAMERS

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Jan. 24.—Arrived: Princess Victoria Louise, from New York, via St. Thomas and San Juan.

Joseph Heitger, State University Student, Is Examined at Bedford

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.) I questioned him and he told me his story. The detectives, it appeared to me, were satisfied with it and were positive he could not have been implicated in any way.

The father then told of the detectives' visit to the house and the examination of his son's room. "He was perfectly willing to take them to his room," the father said. In closing Mr. Heitger said: "That boy of mine is no more guilty than I."

The Heitger family is prominent in Bedford. The father is in the grocery business at 124 1/2 street. Young Heitger has been in the University of Indiana for four years. For the last few months he has remained in Bedford planning to make his extra credits during the spring term and graduate with the class of 1904.

Sheriff Smith and Chief of Police Russell left for the south this afternoon. The sheriff went to Paoli in response to a message from Lynn Jones, former sheriff of Orange county and ex-state agent of the Reformatory, who had a man under surveillance in that town. The chief of police proceeded to Louisville to interview, it is reported, an unknown person from whom a letter was received by the authorities to-day stating that he or she had information which might serve to clear up the mystery of the murder of Miss Schaefer. It is believed that the writer of the letter was a woman, but the authorities are extremely reticent in regard to the matter.

REWARD MAY BE INCREASED. To-night the city officials were considering the advisability of increasing the reward offered for the apprehension of the murderer. It was suggested that the county and city offer an additional $1,000. This increase may bring more detectives to Bedford. Detective Halpin, of Chicago, had planned to make an arrest to-night. He holds in his possession a warrant for a man wanted for wife desertion. The man is J. M. Walker and he was employed in a quarry near here. He was to be held as a suspect simply because his description answered that of the man wanted and because he had a red mustache. He had made an engagement, but failed to keep it, eluding the officer. Had an arrest even of a suspect only been made there would have been threats made on his life by the angered citizens.

It is known to-night that Miss Schaefer had often been bothered by calls over the telephone and several times had thrown down the receiver in disgust. Once and perhaps twice she became displeased when a man came to the schoolhouse to see her. The story that the couple seen by Albert Deich was an Oolitic man and his wife from whom he had been separated some time, is denied by the officials. The report is probably the result of the fact that the body was first identified as the wife.

To-night it is denied that at any time were the homes of two High School boys under surveillance or that the detectives searched the houses. To-night Mayor Smith received a signed communication from Elizabethtown, Ind., saying that a man who had left that town several years ago and come to Bedford might be guilty of the crime. Nothing was done with the information.

HEARD DEATH SCREAMS. The Elliotts were not the only people who heard the frightful death screams of Sarah Schaefer. Mrs. Juilessa Laforee and Ruth Armstrong, living at Thirteenth and K streets, were paralyzed with fright at a scream heard at 9 o'clock. Both say it was the most terrible noise they had ever heard. John Mathers and wife, living at Thirteenth and L streets, heard the scream. This points clearly to the fact that the girl lay dying in the cab shed for hours. The man with the long coat was seen also by William Brown, cashier of the Bedford National Bank, and William Hodges, an undertaker. Brown says that the stranger retraced his steps to keep from passing a man walking east. Charles Duncan saw the man at the corner of Fourteenth and L streets. He made an effort to hide his face. Duncan may prove a valuable witness.

PROSECUTOR MILLER RETURNED TO HIS HOME IN BLOOMINGTON TO-NIGHT AT 10 O'CLOCK. He will resume his duties in court to-morrow. PROSECUTOR MILLER MUST RETURN BEFORE AN ARREST CAN BE MADE, as it is required that he file an affidavit of information against the suspected person.

Right well have you met and maintained your poise. I congratulate you over the way you have controlled your feelings. A helmsman is called on to the helm when you will do nothing rash nor even say a rash word. This is a Christian community. It is to be hoped the murderer will be found. This community will see to it that the majesty of the law will be upheld. Individuals are called on to the committee. Miss Sarah Schaefer came to it a few nights ago. Who can doubt that the great Alford beyond his hope for the murderer will be found. The struggle was fierce, the crime gross beyond all words to describe, but in it all may not be the end. Miss Schaefer was a beautiful girl, a natural teacher—she was a natural teacher. Young people loved her; patrons of the church loved her; she was a member. All departments feel the loss. The heartbroken children weep. Mourning, the heartbroken children weep. Mourning, the heartbroken children weep.

MISS MARIE FEHRENBACH, Who Attracted the Admiration of Adeline Patti. He held in his hand a letter which he intended to give to the girl. He had been to the Phi Gamma Delta chapter house and to attend the basketball game with Butler to-morrow evening. He was seen by the reporter on the night that he was seen to reply to questions, said:

QUIET DAY AT BEDFORD; WORK OF DETECTIVES. An unusual quiet pervaded this little city to-day. The crowds were gone and few people passed by on the streets. The citizens who have stopped in little groups on the street corners to discuss the murder of Sarah Schaefer, a crime that has aroused the entire country, were at their homes, and the work of investigating the murder and running down its perpetrator was almost at a standstill this peaceful Sunday morning.

Views of the Family; Opinions of Teachers. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. ELKHART, Ind., Jan. 24.—Members of the Bedford teachers' association, who are gathered at Bedford, said to-day that the woman against whom a charge was brought back from Bedford by Miss Schaefer's brother and uncle. Evidence on the point, they say, is indispensible.

HER ROOM WAS FULL OF COLLEGE REMINDERS. A visit was made to-day to the Smith home and to the room Sarah Schaefer left a half hour before she fell victim to the murderer who lay in wait for her. Everything was as the dead girl had left it when she turned out the gas and left the room for her boarding house. On the desk, covered with little trinkets gathered in the years spent by the girl in college, was a letter only begun. She probably had laid down the pen a moment before she left the house.

RED-HAIRED SUSPECT TO BE EXAMINED TO-DAY. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Jan. 24.—The red-haired man arrested here yesterday while loitering in a schoolhouse, and held on suspicion of being connected with the Bedford tragedy, will be examined by the mayor to-morrow morning. He refused to make a statement to your correspondent to-day and would not talk even to the sheriff.

HEITGER SAYS THAT HE WAS NOT EXAMINED. Declares Officers Did Not Question Him, and that He Had Not Call on Miss Schaefer. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Jan. 24.—Joseph Heitger arrived here from Bedford this
