BEAR GOOD REPUTATIONS

Defense Introduces Fifteen Witnesses to Prove the Defendants to Be Good Citizens.

ANOTHER 16-GAUGE GUN

It Is Owned by a Rising Sun Laborer-A Strange Man Near the Gillespie Home.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. RIGING SUN, Ind., May 19 .- The defense of James Gillespie and his codefendants was formally opened this morning with an eloquent address to the jury by Congressman Francis M. Griffith, in which was outlined the defense that would be made in the famous murder case. The sum and substance of the statement was that the defendants would prove an alibi, and account, as far as James Gillespie is concerned, for tuat fatal five minutes from the time of the shooting until the appearance of James at the lattice gate. He also stated that the whereabouts of each defendant would be shown at the time the shot was fired. Mr. Griffith said that many of the statements of the state's witnesses would be disproved and the credibility of the defendants and their good reputations shown by numbers of reliable witnesses. The many features of the case were dwelt on at length. Evidence already before the jury, he said, was susceptible to explanation that would render it of more benefit to his clients than to the prosecution. The defense, he said, would show that a strange man was seen lurking in the Gillespie neighborhood not long before the shooting of Elizabeth, and it would be shown beyond any question that it was impossible for James Gillespie to have done the shooting and escaped unseen.

The address was listened to by a large audience and the speaker was given close attention. The defendants expressed much pleasure at the way in which their side of the case was presented by their attorney, and exchanged many congratulatory remarks during its delivery.

REPUTATIONS WERE GOOD. The court stated to the attorneys for the defense that fifteen witnesses would be permitted to testify as to the reputaion of the defendants, deeming that number amply sufficient.

Orville J. Harris, a hardware dealer; Harvey W. Scranton, vice president of the National Bank of Rising Sun, where Myron Barbour is employed as assistant cashier; Simon Behmer, president of the National Bank; R. A. Steele, an undertaker; William M. Green, a merchant; Joshua M. Spencer, an attorney, and others, each testified that the general reputations of defendants were good, although some of the witnesses had heard reports of ill treatment of Elizabeth by James Gillespie, and of a fight James had with his brother, Robert Gillespie, in which Robert was badly cut on the leg with a chisel by James. During the afternoon, and shortly before adjournment, Margaret Gillespie, the aged mother of Belle Seward and James Gillespie, was placed on the stand. Her de-meanor was quiet, and, although quite feeble, she answered the questions propounded to her with an evident sincerity that carried conviction to all who heard her. She stated that Jim, as she called her son, was a good boy; that he had attended to her farm for many years, always satisfac-torily to her, and fully accounted to her for She said he had no bad habits and was a boy; that she never knew of James throwing hot water on Elizabeth. She detailed the care and attention shown by Jim to his sister Elizabeth a few years ago when Elizabeth had a serious spell of sickness; that she never saw James strike or choke Elizabeth. Witness said that she and Elizabeth discovered a strange man in their yard about a year and a half ago; that he scaled the back fence and escaped

The defense was chagrined at the result of its examination, and from one important point had failed to elicit any damaging statements from the witness.

The effort of the defense to secure such a statement was blocked by the court in sustaining objections by the state to the question of Judge Palmer, "what was your object in going to Indianapolis, when you stated to Mrs. Smith you intended going to your home in Seymour?" Mr. Lowe, for the state, in explaining its objection to this question, stated that bearing on the case nor affect the defendant's guilt or innocence, directly or indirectly, "Miss Love's private affairs," continued Mr. Lowe, "cannot be dragged into this case.'

City Marshal Frank Russell told of tak ing charge of decedent's clothing and storing it at City Hall, and afterward assisted in examining the dead girl's effects, all of which were enumerated to the jury. The banquet was held in the large Amercan dining room, where a long table, amply large enough to seat the entire number of guests, had been laid. The decorations were roses and carnations.

Another table formed a cross at the head or south end of the main table. At this table were seated his Highness, Wong Kai Kah, the toastmaster, John W. Kern and the other speakers of the evening. Hugh J. McGowan and Meredith Nicholson sat at one end of the table, William Fortune and H. H. Hanna at the other. On the side facing the principal table, in order of their position, were Senator Charles W. Fairbanks, Wong Kai Kah, his imperial Highness Prince Pu Lun, John W. Kern, Senator Albert J. Beveridge, James Whitcomb Riley and Hon. John L. Griffiths.

The prince took great interest in the affair, but ate little and drank less. He smoked digarettes and digars, however, and apparently took great pleasure in sending out clouds of tobacco smoke.

The most interesting feature of the evening came after the banquet proper was over, when the toasts were proposed and responded to in the inimitable manner of several of Indiana's most noted sons.

In a speech full of wit and cleverness, John W. Kern introduced Senator Fairbanks, the first speaker of the evening, who made the formal welcoming address. Mr. world" had been used no less than thirtytwo times on the preceding day at the welcome of his Imperial Highness at the Statehouse, he, as toastmaster, felt called upon to bar them from use last night.
