ALL SAINTS' DAY.—The elements are always in the humor November—at least they have been so as far as we can remember; and yesterday the good old custom was not departed from. The day was supremely pleasantful, and the time honored custom of visiting and decorating the cemeteries was never more faithfully observed.

The custom is as well known here, that it is scarcely necessary to say to the reader anything more upon the subject. Suffice it to say, that we might fire our readers' imaginations with the sublimity of the different beautiful dirges to which we met the eye at every turn in those venerable cities of the dead—the old Catholic cemeteries in the Second District. The different tombs of our old and wealthy creole families were, to a greater degree, beautiful; the glare of the marble and the glitter of the decorations being about as much as ordinary eyes could bear in the shining sunshine of the day. The natural and the artificial flowers were in perfect profusion on every side, and in the other cemeteries the same aspect appropriate to the time was observed. The sepulchres of the different benevolent societies of the city, and the tombs of many of the Italians, in the Basin cemetery, were deeply and decorated very prettily and elegantly, particularly that of the Portuguese Benevolent Association, over which a very neat arch
