THE COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT.

New Orleans Money Market.

CRESCENT OFFICE, No. 70 Camp street,
Saturday Evening, Nov. 7, 1857.

We event in the commercial and financial history of New Orleans has been of greater importance than the maintenance of coin payments by our chief banks through the recent revulsion and panic. To enumerate the many advantages, to dilate on the imperishable honor and exaltation which will hereafter attach to the fame and credit of our city would require more space than we can well spare at this moment.

The contrast between the close of this week and of the preceding four weeks is so great that we can hardly realize that we are in the same community. We have no disposition to exult and rejoice over those who so inconsiderately advocated a suspension on the part of our banks. They must now feel convinced that they were wrong and we were right.

Referring to the extraordinarily favorable changes in the position of the banks, as will be seen by the statement below, we have to remark on the greatly improved condition of the general market. The sales of cotton have been beyond all anticipation, with a gradual daily advance since Monday last. Sugar, which was sold at ruinous prices (rather in small quantities) has also improved, and bids fair to command very satisfactory prices to the planter and merchant, and to be within reasonable rates to consumers. Gold is now coming from the West to be invested in sugar and molasses, and should navigation continue unobstructed, a brisk business will be on hand among planters and sugar factors in a short time.

There has been some improvement in other branches of trade, but not to the extent which will be realized so soon as the reaction in cotton and sugar is known in the country. It will hardly be prudent, nor will it correspond with sound maxims for our merchants and traders in general to anticipate that sales
