THE COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT.

New Orleans Money Market.

CRESCENT OFFICE, No. 79 Camp street,
Saturday Evening, Nov. 14, 1857.

The improvement in general trade for the week has been of a very satisfactory character. Our great staple has come to market freely, and met with ready purchasers at very remunerative prices—in fact, planters will, as the season advances, be well satisfied with the general results. The price of supplies for plantations use are declining. Pork has already fallen from eight to ten dollars per barrel; say from $24 down to $14@$15, and almost every article required is tending downward. This ought not to lead to the old policy that prevailed, which was, plante a neglecting to raise their own provisions, depending on other sections for them; considering is cheaper to pursue this system, which, in all cases save cotton, has been productive of lasting and serious injury to the South, agricultural as well as financial. A reciprocity in commerce is, of course, highly advantageous to all interests; but some sections of the country do not seem to pay any regard to this policy, and take more delight in abusing the credit of the Southwest, and this emporium in particular, than in mutual interchanges of trade and good feeling.

During the recent panic, the financial position of our city has been eminently and unaccountably assailed. The birds of passage, transient residents who come to-day and go to-morrow, furnished probably with orders for a few bales of cotton or a few hogsheads of sugar, have also been very free in their remarks on the solidity of our banks and the solvency of our merch
