SATURDAY MORNING, JANUARY 6, 1866.

River Intelligence.

CRESCENT OFFICE, No. 91 CARP STREET, } Saturday, January 6, 1866.

Yesterday was a beautiful day. The weather just moderated enough to be also every one feel comfortable who had outdoor business. We had some ten or twelve steamers, and they all left with a fair trips. The incoming steamers had good trips.

Capt. W Fairley's steamer, the T. D. Hine, came to the landing yesterday, ready and in trim order for business. She is to be running and leaves on Monday for Red River. For freight apply to Messrs. Hine & Murdock, 54 Gravier street.

Mr. C. G. Kouns, President of the Upper Red River Low Water Packet Company, officially notifies all steamboat Captains going above the raft that J. W. Graves is a duly authorized Superintendent and Toll Collector, residing at the wood yard, Jarvis, for the Company.

Gleanings from our exchanges:

St. Louis, Jan. 5.—The Missouri.—When we cannot have the pleasure of announcing anything like a break-up in the ice, we have the next best thing—and to be able to announce that the river is becoming open enough to be able to see large fields of ice floating a good way off and down stream over steamboats, but these were only of small size. Some crushed ice, consisting of a heavy sprinkling of high freshets. To-day we have to open a new department of our paper, to be headed "Missouri River Matters," which will contain all the interesting matter we can glean from the Missouri river, which is evidently strong for a coming over on this side. We stand several inches of ice on the levee in front of our office, which is considerably strong for a man to run on without breaking through it. The river rose only about one inch yesterday, and is now at that point.

Two feet in the river marks low water at Red River Rock.

It is announced in the Steamboat Exchange room Nashville, dated January 4th, 1866, that the Cumberland river was at that point 20 feet 6 in., under the rock at the Nashville bridge.

Among the arrivals at the Planters' House, St. Louis, January 3, are Alfred White, Belle St. Louis, Kansas; J. S. Simmons, Evansville, Indiana; Mr. Bowen, Jeffersonville, Indiana; Mr. Wells, Louisville, Kentucky; Lewis Gale, Cincinnati, Ohio; Mr. Barker, Knox Robinson, Southern Wave, Mississippi; Mr. Kate, Memphis, Tennessee; Leonidas, Memphis, Tennessee; Mr. Arthur, St. Johns, Tennessee; Mr. Arthur, St. Johns, Tennessee; Mr. Arthur, St. Johns
