

The New Orleans Crescent. OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE STATE OF LOUISIANA. N. W. NIXON, Editor and Proprietor. OFFICE NO. 94 CAMP STREET.

AMUSEMENTS THIS EVENING. OPERA HOUSE—Adams' opera in three acts, "If I were King."

CHARITY.—In our special notice column will be found a request to the several Episcopal congregations in the city to assemble this evening, at 7 o'clock, in St. Paul's church, to listen to some address to be made relative to the "Children's Home."

Major General Hartwell, who for two years past, in the capacity of assistant adjutant general at military headquarters, has, by his invariable courtesy, made many friends, leaves for the North to-morrow, having been relieved from duty in this command.

$122 per bale was the very handsome price realized yesterday at auction for damaged cotton. Mr. Chas. T. Nash made the sale, and to his clever management must be attributed the success of it.

New Orleans gentlemen in New York never leave their without obtaining an outfit of clothes, which they can be certain are made in the best manner and in the latest style.

The Washington Benevolent Association will hold a meeting this evening at parlor P, St. Charles Hotel, for the transaction of important business. See special notices.

The 25th anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto was celebrated on the field of that contest last Tuesday. The following survivors of that battle were present: Gen. Sidney Sherman, Capt. Jesse Billingsley, Hon. Oscar Farris, Mr. Ellis Benson and Mr. Joseph Lancaster.

Four boys, the oldest and leader named George Briggs, being only fourteen years of age, broke into the engine house of the railroad at Freshhold, New Jersey, a few nights ago, "fired up" a locomotive, and started for an excursion along the road.

The Houston Telegraph states that D. C. Oils, who has been employed by the Texas Express Company for the past six weeks, and stationed at Hempstead, absconded on the 15th with some $2500 in gold.

LIFE INSURANCE.—In another column will be found the advertisement of the Piedmont Real Estate Life Insurance Company of Virginia.

It offers great inducements to those contemplating that most prudent of all acts, life insurance. It has plans for policies on the all cash and also on the part cash systems, at the option of the applicant, and, where desired, makes the payment easier to persons with small but fixed incomes by allowing the cash portion of the premium to be paid in semi-annual or quarterly installments.

Its officers are men of high standing and well-known business capacity in Virginia, where the domicile of the company is established.

The Piedmont only began operations in September last, and its success up to this time has been great and is steadily increasing. In addition to the business advantages offered, the Piedmont is a purely Southern corporation, and its interests are consequently thoroughly interwoven and identified with those of the people among whom it finds its present patrons and future beneficiaries.

For further information regarding this young and vigorous company, we refer to Gen. Dabney H. Maury, Major T. B. Wigfall, of Texas, and Mr. Henry Goodrich, of this city, at the New Orleans office of the company, 24 Union street.

The Waco Register says that the country is full of beef buyers, and beefs are being bought up by the thousands, some to be driven to New Orleans, but mostly to Kansas. Drovers of them are passing through Waco daily.

SPRING CLOTHING AT THE TELANE BUILDING.—Cast your eyes over the advertisements in this morning's Crescent and when you get to that of Messrs. Garthwaite, Lewis & Stuart stop and think, for upon reflection you might save many a dollar. Among the many articles of wearing apparel to be found in this house that is beautiful in point of material and elegant in style, you will find that they are as cheap as they are beautiful. Yes, we repeat it, their stock of clothing and furnishing goods is large and complete, and their prices extremely moderate.

SUGGESTIONS OF THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

By common consent, it would seem, the 26th of April has been adopted for the annual commemoration of the Confederate dead; that being the day which consummated the military overthrow of their cause, and dismissed the survivors of this woful catastrophe of the bloodiest of dramas to another, but scarcely a less gloomy and ominous stage of struggle, trial and suffering. It is meet that such an anniversary tribute should be rendered. A people cannot afford to be indifferent even to their dead who expired peacefully. Much less can a people afford to be indifferent to their heroic dead, who fell on the impetuous edge of battle, even though it should be deemed that they perished in vain. Where such indifference exists, there can be no manly virtue, no lofty aspiration, no true feeling of the mysterious and vital relations of the living to the dead, of the future to the past, of humanity to God. Impiety towards the grave and towards ancestry argues the presence of all other impieties. And hence its manifestation is one of the direst tokens of general depravity and hopeless degeneration. The Southern people would dishonor themselves, the age, the American name, if they did not honor the glorious dust of their countrymen who, unquailing, on so many fields, met the iron storm of death and died that the South might live. If they failed to do this duty, they would add shame to the misfortunes of their subjugated land.

But let it not be supposed that the occasion calls for doleful reflections on the fate of those to whose commemoration this day is dedicated. They are not to be pitied. Death was cheerful and niggard towards thousands who would infinitely rather be now sleeping with the comrades whom, with loving partiality, he laid to rest at Shiloh and Chickamauga, at Gettysburg and the Wilderness, than to drink the cup of humiliation and contumely which cowardice and vengeance have brimmed for conquered survivors. If, perchance, some of them, with the instincts of young and lusty natures, were fain to cling to life, and repined at the stroke which cut its thread at a time when the future seemed rich with possibilities of happiness, only one glimpse of the realities which that future had in store would have caused them to turn to death with rapturous content. And if, perchance, some spectators of the contest which they waged were not clear and decided as to the ethics and the logic of their cause, the course of the dominant party who have administered conquest over the surviving adherents of that cause has been such as to prove that it was as righteous in effort as it was disastrous in issue. Dead and unsuccessful, their justification is more complete, therefore, than it would have been had they lived and triumphed.

Nor let it be supposed that the dead who are to-day commemorated, died in vain. And yet their cause, in its outward and organic shape, unquestionably was lost, and lost beyond the possibility of restoration. We may look back upon them as men of another era, for the precise social arrangement, and the precise political organization, by which they were moulded, are to be hereafter matters of history, but never more of human experience. In so far as war destroyed these conditions, it destroyed their cause. But what it contained of universal truth and justice is immortal. Nothing perishes permanently which is worthy to survive. It is absurd and impious to talk of a right and wholesome principle subjected to the hazards of war, and then abolished by the untoward issue of a battle. It can no more be put to the sword than the Infinite reason and Divine justice can. The condition of American politics at this moment, is most conclusive proof that the war established nothing but the temporary supremacy of brute force. The repose upon fixed principles which the human reason seeks, and which society needs as much as the human reason, is still wanting; and until this is attained there will be no assurance of liberty without license, of order without tyranny, of progress without sanguinary revolution.

The shipping merchants of St. Louis contemplate memorializing Congress to open Bayou Manchac, which was closed by General Jackson in the war of 1812. It is estimated that a quarter of a million of dollars will accomplish the work. If this were done, steamers navigating the Mississippi river could go direct to Mobile, and any point on the Alabama river.

A Port Jervis special says a telegram has been received from the general superintendent, to the effect that the report of the conductor of the sleeping car, who is now in New York, shows that there were twenty-three passengers in the rear coach that was completely destroyed by fire. So far as has been ascertained, but two persons escaped from the car, and the remains of six only have been recovered. This leaves fifteen of whom there is no trace.

THE MEXICAN GULF RAILROAD.

The design of reorganizing the Mexican Gulf Railroad Company, and of carrying out the plan under which the company was originally chartered, is, we are informed, about to be consummated. We understand that some of the wealthiest planters of St. Bernard have taken the matter in hand, and have subscribed largely to the stock of the new enterprise. It is contemplated to make a necessary repairs, and to have the road in running order within a few months. The idea which originated this road was that of making for New Orleans a new port in the deep waters of the gulf, by the use of which Mobile would be brought within 135 miles, and the circuitous navigation by the river route be avoided. If such a plan could be consummated, it would, undoubtedly, prove of vast benefit to the commerce of this city. Much would be saved both in time and charges; and considerations of this kind are those which ought to govern in every projected enterprise.

Unfortunately for the design of the projectors, the original plan was never carried into effect. The road was constructed to a point on the lake shore, now designated as Proctorville, and there it stopped. In that condition it was useful only for local business, and of this there was scarcely enough to support it. Of late it has gone almost entirely to ruin. After many vicissitudes, during which it was sold three times, it finally lapsed into disuse, and people who want to visit the shores of Lake Borgne, or to reach any part of the parish of St. Bernard, have, for a year or more, been forced to make use of the old-fashioned conveyances. It is a hopeful sign of renewed life and activity, that the old project has been renewed under auspices which promise well for its success. The projected terminus is only ten miles beyond Proctorville, and consequently it can be reached within a short time. Meanwhile the local traffic is reviving; the lake shore will be an attraction as a summer resort, and appearances indicate that under the new organization the enterprise will prove a success.

NEW BOOKS.

BREAK HOUSE, by Charles Dickens, New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1888. Krull & Dickey, 103 Canal street, New Orleans.

ANTIQUARY, A Romance, by Sir Walter Scott, Bart. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Krull & Dickey, New Orleans.

The above volumes are the latest issues by the publishers of their elegant cheap editions of the works of Scott and Dickens. The fact that there is a demand for the republication of such works is an encouraging evidence that the taste of the reading public is not wholly vitiated.

THE MASTERY SERIES, by Thomas Prendergast, author of the "Mastery of Languages," etc. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1888. Krull & Dickey, New Orleans.

These publications include a "Handbook," explaining the process of acquiring languages for colloquial and writing purposes by the mastery method, together with a volume of practical examples and exercises in French, and another in German. Of the advantages of this method, which is assimilated to the spontaneous manner in which children learn languages, there is not the least doubt.

ALBERT HASTINGS, A novel, by Mary Scrimgeour Whitaker. Bielock & Co., 130 Canal street.

The contents of this volume are such as to sustain the promise of the publishers' prospectus of it, to which we not long ago referred. Its scenes and characters relate to a period anterior to the war, a period past and historic, and is happily free from hackneyed political discussion, as well as from all subjects and descriptions of dubious moral tendency.

SULLIVAN, A Novel, by Christopher. New Orleans, 130 Canal street.

The author's name, as given above, is no doubt fictitious. He is a Southern writer, we take it, and his story is placed in the South. The style shows no unskillful hand in authorcraft.

We have also from Bielock & Co., Putnam's Monthly Magazine for May, with a long list of attractive contents, including a very interesting article on the Mississippi River by James O. Noyes.

DAVID, THE KING OF ISRAEL: A portrait drawn from Bible history and the book of Psalms, by Fred. Wm. Krummacker, D.D., author of "Elijah the Tishbite," etc. Translated under the express sanction of the author. By Rev. M. G. Easton, M. A. New York: Harper & Bros., 1888. Geo. Ellis, opposite the Post-Office, New Orleans.

Pious fervor and Biblical faith and enthusiasm are not often looked for in these days in a German book; and in these particulars this volume is almost as exceptional as it is well welcome to a large class of American readers.

CHARLOTTE'S INHERITANCE, A novel, by M. E. Braddon. New York: Harper & Bros.: 1888. George Ellis, New Orleans.

This is a sequel to "Birds of Prey," by the same author, of whose merits and wide popularity as a novelist it is needless to say anything here.

HARPER'S PHRASE BOOK.—English, French, German and Italian. George Ellis, New Orleans.

A very convenient hand book for travelers and schools as a guide to conversation in the languages enumerated.

HARPER'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT REBELLION, Nov. 25, 26, 27 and 28. George Ellis, New Orleans.

In point of pictorial illustration the excellence of this serial publication is universally admitted.

THE HOME MONTHLY, A. B. Stark, editor. Robert J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

The April number of this periodical gives proof of industry and talent, and is creditable to its editor, publisher and contributors.

A CARD.

JUSTICE SHALLOW ENRAGED.

About half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon an amusing scene occurred on the shady side of Canal street, between St. Charles and Carondelet streets. In company with Mr. H. Bonson, I was taking an evening walk, when I heard my name called twice, and turning in the direction of the voice saw U. R. Commissionaire Shannon running across the street towards me. Having been repeatedly notified by leading members of the Radical party that I had better look out or Shannon would be after me, I had at last come to the conclusion that the cry of "Wolf, wolf!" meant nothing; but when the man so readily drawn in Shannon's direction, (his blue shirt, and bearing in his hand what evidently appeared to be the implements of his profession. Striding across the gutter, with an agility truly remarkable, Shannon stopped before me, dashed and excited with heat, running or something else.

When he had recovered sufficient breath to speak, he turned to me and exclaimed, "I've got you—I've got you—I've got an affidavit against you!" Supposing this to be one of the little jokes of the great man, I bowed and, placing my hand upon my breast, replied, "Do you mean you have got me, Mr. Shannon, for I am very strong here?" To this the United States Commissionaire answered severely, "Oh, I've got you—I've got you—I'll hold you, too!" Mr. Shannon illustrated the last sentence by stretching out his right arm, clenching his right hand, and shaking both menacingly towards me in the most approved style of the "heavy villain," which he repeated the words, "I'll hold you, too, ha-ha-ha." Exit shallow.
