SUNDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 6, 1893.

THE BOND ORDINANCE DEFEATED.

The election yesterday resulted in the defeat of the bond ordinance by a large majority of the votes cast; but not, we need scarcely say, by a majority of the vote of the city. The total vote was only 6276 out of a white vote of about 28,000, and an aggregate of nearly 45,000. Of course, it cannot be claimed that this small proportion necessarily represents the views of the community; but it does indicate a greater degree of activity and interest on the part of the opponents of the measure than on the part of its friends. We regret that the people of New Orleans did not attach the importance to this question which it deserved, and which will, we are convinced, make itself felt at no distant day. We think that they will soon perceive the error which they have made, and we trust that they will not suffer themselves to be much longer deluded by arguments addressed not to their reason and their integrity, but to passion and selfishness. We still believe that the only feasible way of solving the financial problem by which the city has so long been vexed, is to fund the city money, and thus get it out of the way. The opponents of the measure pretend all their arguments by the confession that the debt ought to be paid, and must be paid, but they qualify the admission by asserting that the creditors of the city have no right to make a profit out of the people. Of course no one affirms that the city creditors have any such right; but they have a right to be paid. If the argument, therefore, means anything, it means that they have no right to demand the full amount expressed on the face of the obligations, but that the city ought to compound with its creditors, by forcing them to take less than their due. We do not exactly see on what basis this plan rests, or in what manner it differs, qualitatively, from repudiation. But if repudiation is meant, why not say so in express terms and not resort to vague intimations and veiled suggestions.

THE RACES ON MONDAY.—There are three races for Monday. The first will be a dash of two miles for $350; the second will be for $600—mile heats, three in five. This will be exceedingly interesting. For these no entries have as yet been made, though it is expected that in the last Joe Johnston—"Seven-hear Joe," as his admirers call him—will play a conspicuous part. The third race is to be a match race for $1000 a side, dash of half a mile, between a mare, name unknown, belonging to Col. Todd, of Baton Rouge, and Nannie McNair. There has been a large amount of money staked on this race by outsiders, and it will be, probably, a close one and a pretty one. The weather now promises fair. If it so continues, Monday will be a great day for the Metairie.

Of the third page of this morning's CRES-CENT, will be found our weekly theatrical summary, embracing descriptions of "Undine" and "Dora," sketches of Messrs. Pope, Vining Bowers and Mlle Sohke, and theatrical chit-chat generally.

The telegrams from Europe state that rumors of a mob in Paris had unsettled the markets. There is nothing wanting in verisimilitude in these rumors; and, indeed, they may be the mere expression of an apprehension, which the course of events in France of late have aroused in every observing mind. Advertisements from Paris for several months past have indicated a wide-spread discontent with the government, and the recent news has pointed to a culmination in revolt or revolution. The demonstrations in honor of the memory of Baudin, and the persistent defiance of the government by the leaders of these movements in spite of warnings, fines and imprisonment, have a higher significance than that of merely formal opposition. And, on the other hand, the arbitrary and violent course of the emperor shows that he regards the division between himself and the people to be wider than any that could grow out of simple disapprobation of some ephemeral measure, or some transient policy. It is plainly recognized by both parties that the question now is between the French people and that peculiar form of imperialism which Napoleon has established in France, and which, of late years, has become more and more egotistical, and less and less national in its character. That a revolution, or an attempt at revolution, should grow out of such a situation would not be at all surprising.

A person named Packard, who has appeared several times in print as the chairman of the Republican party of Louisiana, again rushes forward to what he, perhaps, fancies himself is an encounter with General Rousseau. It may be extremely gratifying to this person to find that he has actually succeeded in assuming the position of an antagonist of the commanding general, but we do not presume that that officer will be much disturbed by the assault, or that the people of New Orleans will attach any importance to the efforts of the assailant. General Rousseau's word is quite as good as Mr. Packard's—not to put too fine a point upon it, it is much better—and as the question, if question there be, is simply one of fact, as between the two, it would be quite superfluous for the general to notice Mr. Packard's attempt to make an issue of veracity with him. Between General Rousseau and this person there can be no such issue. The general's testimony if it needed corroboration, would be strengthened rather than weakened by the denials of the chairman of the Republican party of the State of Louisiana. Indeed, the best way to discredit a fact in the eyes of the community in which this person and his associates are known is that these persons should testify to its truth, and the best way to establish a fact is that they should deny it.

To the REAL SOUTHERN PEOPLE.

In the year 1865 the undersigned, perceiving that their friends in the South were being imposed upon by thousands of vile compounds under the names of Watkins, Bradbur, Gins, Schnapps, Bitters, etc., etc., determined to begin the manufacture of a pure medicinal spirit out of home-grown Southern herbs, to supply the want of the public in this line, which had created the demand. We called our spirit

Grey Jacket Bitters, And so popular did they soon become that they are at this early date (a little over three years from their first manufacture) used all over the South. THE MATERIALS WE USE NOW ARE THE SAME AS WERE EMPLOYED BY US AT FIRST. AND WE HAVE SO FAR HEARD NO COMPLAINTS OF GREY JACKET BITTERS BEING COUNTERFEITED, while the papers are filled with warnings from Yankee manufacturers of pretended or real counterfeits of their medicated spirits. THAT THESE SPIRITS WERE BAD WAS UNDENIABLE. But with whom the responsibility properly rested the Southern people could not reasonably know, nor do we suppose they cared. They only ceased to purchase them and bought the GREY JACKET BITTERS in their place.

OUR OBJECT NOW IS TO PROCLAIM THAT THE Great Southern Medicinal Spirit, No. 8 Jackson, corner Tchoupitoulas street, Upper side of Jackson. C. H. Miller & Co., C. H. MILLER, P. W. Read and Ponder. SOUR GRAPE.

There is a fable of a fox which exhausted every means in its power to get some nice blue grapes from the top of a tree, but without success; becoming disgusted with its ineffectual efforts, exclaimed: "THE GRAPES ARE SOUR." One is reminded of the above by an advertisement of a Sew, which tried to get the Blue Ribbons at State Fairs without success, now exclaims "BURNED READ."
