VIOLETTAS PICTURE

ANDSOME Lawrence Meredith stood spellbound before his finished picture, while the light breeze from an open window tossed his wavy hair about his brow. He was charmed and delighted with his own handiwork, but it was something more than the mere beauty of his model's face that caused his heart to beat so rapturously.

With a sudden movement Violetta sprang from her chair and ran hastily across the floor. "He loves his picture but not me," she muttered as she left the room. "Fool that I am to think that he would care for me! He is bound body and soul to his art."

After she had gone, Lawrence Meredith stood a moment in thought, then lighted a cigar and drew the chair before the easel. He was an honorable fellow and he knew he was too poor to marry. He determined at once that he would never speak one word of love to Violetta until he was fully able to lead her to the altar and give her, at least, a comfortable home.

Then it occurred to him that he had not even bade her good night and this was the last of her daily sittings. "Oh, Lawrence! Don't!" The memory startled him a little and he searched in his pockets for the address that she had given him.

"I will go and see her this evening and arrange for other sittings," he said to himself as he read the little scrap of paper that he found in his pocket book. An hour later he was on his way to Violetta's humble lodgings.

It was a dreadful disappointment to learn that she was out. "She had not returned from her afternoon's sitting," the old landlady told him. Absently, Lawrence entered a restaurant, and ordered his evening meal, then he went slowly back to the studio, intending to write her a lengthy letter. He would not tell her that he loved her, yet, but would simply explain that he had decided to paint another picture, and would continue to require her services if she were not already fatigued with her weeks of tiresome sittings.

THE LONGEST SPEECH. A Twenty-Six Hour Effort to Kill an Objectionable Bill.

"I was recently introduced," said Albert H. Steele, of Portland, Ore., "to a legislator who, I believe, has the record for making the longest continuous speech ever delivered. He is a member of the legislature of British Columbia, in which there is no such thing as a senatorial courtesy, so that a long speaker cannot get a few minutes' rest for refreshments, as he generally can in the upper house of this country. The record breaker, who is of French descent, is an old college athlete, and on one occasion last session he was put up by the opposition to talk a bill to death.

"The majority saw through the device at once and put every obstacle in the way of the speaker. Not deterred by objections and points of order, the old athlete husbanded his strength and spoke steadily, without any longer pauses than were necessary to moisten his parched throat with an occasional innocent drink, twice around the clock. He started at 10 o'clock in the morning, kept steadily at his work all the afternoon, evening and night, and did not even pause when the lights were turned out the following morning. Eye witnesses tell me that as the morning wore on his voice was little more than a whisper and his eyes were bloodshot. He bore up manfully, however, and did not sit down until the clock struck 12, when the bill became dead by lapse of time, and he secured a respite which was well earned, even if his cause was not a very noble one. He speaks of his twenty-six hour effort with a shudder, and says he would rather walk 100 miles than go through the ordeal again."

TURNING THE TABLES. The Negro Met the Lawyer on His Own Ground. A Kentucky lawyer was standing on the steps of the Covington post-office the other day, when an old colored man came up and, touching his hat, asked: "Kin you tell me, is dis de place where dey sell postage stamps?"

"Yes, sir; this is the place," replied the lawyer, seeing a chance for a little quiet fun; "but what do you want with postage stamps, uncle?" "To mail a letter, sah, of course." "Well, then, you needn't bother about stamps; you don't have to put any on this week."

"I don't?" "No, sir." "Why—for not?" "Well, you see, the conglomeration of the hypothenuse has differentiated the parallelogram so much that the commensality don't exultate the ordinary effervescence, and so the government has decided to send letters free."

CURE OF INEBRIETY. Oranges Said to Be Very Effective in Creating a Distaste for Alcohol. It is now universally acknowledged by competent authorities that inebriety is a disease, physical as well as mental and moral, and to give the pledge of total abstinence to the inveterate drunkard without specific instructions what to do next, and expect him to keep it, is to look for a stupendous effort which only the man with sound mental energy and bodily vigor can perform. An expert writing on this subject says that the first step in the progress of true temperance reform must be the recognition of the fact that the irresistible craving for strong drink is the effect of causes which must be got rid of before the drunkard can be regarded as safe from temptation. The various patent remedies can in no sense be regarded as a cure, for the only cure in the real sense of the word is to get the whole man into better condition, his body purified, and his will strengthened. Diet is of extreme importance, and if skillfully directed will wear away the craving naturally and without danger to the individual. All salted and heavy food stuffs should be avoided. To cultivate a distaste for alcohol oranges are more effective than almost anything else known. They should be taken, one at a time, before breakfast, at 11 a. m., at 1 p. m., at 3 p. m., at 5 p. m., and the last thing on retiring. Apples and lemon juice are also excellent.

Popes and Their Beards. If we are to believe the old proverb, prophets have always had beards for the faithful to swear by; not so with the popes. From the time of St. Peter down to the year 1153 the popes all wore full beards, but for the next four centuries they were cleanly shaven. Then came a period of two centuries in which they again wore the beard, but from the year 1700 until the present time the smooth face alone has been seen in the papal line. Just What He Wanted.
