IT WAS MATHEMATICAL.

It was an intellectual sort of a snake that he had an interest in. Said a well-known raconteur of snake stories the other day by way of a round up of several: "I can't call any more to mind just at present. My wife knows a lot of snake stories, but I forget 'em. By the way, though, I've got a regular living curiosity down at my place. One day my eldest boy was sitting on a stool in the back yard doing his sums, and he couldn't get 'em right. He felt something against his face, and there was a little snake curled up on his shoulder and looking at the slate. In four minutes he had done all the sums. We've tamed him, so he keeps all our accounts, and he is the quickest head at figures you ever saw. He'll run up a column eight feet long in three seconds. I wouldn't take a prize cow for him."

CRANKS AT THE CAPITOL.

Disturbances Occasionally Take Place in the Galleries of the House. The recent appearance of a demented negro in the gallery of the house of representatives recalled numerous similar occurrences to some of the elder members. In the forty-fifth congress, when the 4th of March came upon Monday, a deadlock over an appropriation bill led to a session which lasted until Sunday forenoon.

THE REBEL QUEEN.

AT 32 Mrs. Elveda had said to her husband, "I will not obey you. Woman is the equal of man." So they had separated, and a mad me had become indeed the rebel queen of her sex, the leader of the great cause. She had written a book which told everything in the history of woman, and all the women who believed that they were equal to men had joined her standard. She was very wealthy, and her wealth gave her power, and she used it for the cause. In her own mind she had dedicated her daughter to the cause from her birth. She should take up and finish the work of her mother. But a day came when an explanation and an understanding were required. "You are displeased with me, mother. I have seen it for a long time."

FANCIES OF INVALIDS.

A Gentleman Who Longed for a Dish of Grilled Elephant's Foot. About the manner of serving their food patients sometimes have curious fancies. In one case a woman persistently refused to take her beef tea unless the bread which accompanied it was cut in the shape of diamonds, while in another it was always necessary to serve the food in a blue basin, for out of nothing else whatsoever would she take nourishment. A boy who was attacked with scarlet fever showed great disinclination to take food, but finally agreed to swallow what was necessary, provided he was fed in the following way: The beef tea, or whatever was to be given him, was put into a silver teapot. The spout was placed in his mouth, and in this manner the food was poured down his throat.

THE LASH FOR A MEAN FELLOW.

In Geneva, Ala., close to the Florida line, Ed Cowart and Miss Lizzie Lunwood were to have wedded. All arrangements were made, the preacher and the guests had arrived, the wedding supper was spread, but the bridegroom was missing. A delegation was sent after him, but he declined to come, saying he had changed his mind. The assembled gentlemen provided themselves with masks, again called upon the bridegroom, carried him into the woods, buckled him across a log, and lashed him unmercifully, the blood being made to flow from his back.

NEBLY RESISTING TEMPTATION.

"Ain't that a fine horse Elder Keop-along's drivin' to church?" exclaimed Sammy. "It 'd make a splendid match for our Pete. If you could trade the chestnut filly to the elder for that—" "Sammy," said Deacon Ironside, looking resolutely the other way and heaving a deep sigh of mournful resignation, "This is Sunday!"

THE REBEL QUEEN.

Her mother groaned. "You have got all this out of Harold's proposal? Oh, what fools women are! How can we make them stand up for themselves?" "Well, mother, that is my case—I am one of the fools. But, of course, there may be marriages where people don't love each other. Then it would be easy for each to go his own way. Neither would care."

"Good heavens!" cried Mrs. Elveda. "Had I known what mischief that young man was going to do, he should never have entered my house." "But, my dearest mother, woman, you say, must be the equal of man; otherwise—otherwise—well—but give me the case of a woman who loves a man greatly her superior. Equality in that case is impossible, and submission is a joy. Will you grant the possibility of such a case?" "When the woman is a fool—yes." "Let me go on confessing, mother. Since I have been thinking of these things I have begun to feel a kind of repugnance to the whole question. You say that I have sat inattentive at your meetings. It is because the subject seems altogether altered. The speeches of your friends have become a flow of meaningless words—words—words—words that I know by heart—words that have no meaning. There is a voice within me that keeps on asking the same question: 'If women are the equals of men, why don't they prove it? They are, you see, as well educated; they will become leaders in everything if they were men's equals. Yet all leaders in everything are men—always men. And if we score a little triumph of a degree at Cambridge, we rejoice as much as if Huxley were a woman or Darwin were in petticoats. Why don't women prove their equality? And why, when a woman loves a man, does she cheerfully become his servant? Why do not women who love their husbands assert their equality?'"

"I read once of a person who preached himself into infidelity. Sometimes I think that is my case. My arguments no longer persuade me. They are sounds and words carrying no sense. Woman is man's equal. Oh! you have proved it in your book and in your articles and pamphlets. And all the women in the world except one or two take the lower place without revolt or murmur. They have never, in a single line of intellectual work, proved themselves his equal. And they only love a man when they feel him to be greater and stronger than themselves. All that proves nothing. And yet—I say these things, mother, because they explain my present condition. Perhaps it is a passing cloud."

"You make me more unhappy, child, than I can say." "I am very sorry. But I have nearly finished. In my present frame of mind you see that I cannot possibly help you in your work. I am quite out of harmony with it. I understand just through considering how it might have been had I allowed myself to love Harold, that the submissive wife may be, after all, the happiest. I suspect that women are not the intellectual equals of men any more than they are their physical equals. In short, I am in a state of doubt and confusion."

THE REBEL QUEEN.

"Would a life of art satisfy your soul? My dear, I offer you a life of action." "I do not know what would satisfy my soul. In imagination I see a submissive wife, who tells me she is happiest."

THE REBEL QUEEN.

When weeks had passed and Francesca had found her father and Harold had returned to her side, her lover asked: "And you—you are happy, Francesca?" "I am happier than I have ever been in all my life before. There is nothing in the world to live for but the life of nature and God's law. It is such happiness as I never imagined. And all the world has grown so real—and I am in it, not outside of it. The passing show has become part of the eternal drama in which I, too, play my humble part. I have my father and my cousin. I am no longer without kin and kin."

SHE BLUSHED AND LOOKED GUILTY.

Herself? Can she marry him unless she loves him? And after she has married such a man how can she ever venture to call herself his equal? "Humph! But the man is said to worship the woman. Would not your lover be thinking much the same of you?" "He could not unless he foolishly mistook the worth of her dress and her jewels for the worth of the woman herself. Well, mother, those thoughts have filled my brain ever since that morning. Before that I never considered what love might mean nor how love might break down all arguments."

THE REBEL QUEEN.

"I hope, then, that you will speedily desist from the consideration of so dangerous a subject."
