A Perfect Man. It is not often met with in this life, but it is every man's duty to be as nearly perfect as possible. And no woman objects to improving her figure and her health at the same time.

To do this is a stimulus and a pleasure when one has for a companion and instructor Ed. W. Checkley's remarkable book, "A Natural Method of Physical Training." No dieting for fleshiness; no apparatus to make muscle.

"Worth his weight in gold." - New York Herald. "It is truly the natural method." - Public Opinion. "Appeals at once to the good sense of the reader." - Science.

"A new gospel of strength." - Chicago Herald. "Thousands of Brooklynites bear witness to the value of this system." - Brooklyn Times.

A WOMAN'S CURIOSITY

GUTCHLEY was at its wit's end. Who could the mysterious stranger be? No one had ever been a month in the place without having a complete inventory taken of all his ancestors and belongings.

And all Gutchley shook his head in unison; for the Gulliwums were the cream of the society. None of your upstart aristocracy were the Gulliwums. They had a past to point to. The ancestral Gulliwum had come over in the first convict ship that sailed for America, and, after many ups and downs, had met with a fall one day that broke his neck. But for the rope that chanced to be around it at the time, more of his bones might have been broken.

Mr. Ray boarded with the widow Peeke, who failed not to put in practice every widely art to break the ice of his reserve. Which was quite natural. In the first place he was a nice-looking young man, and the memory of the departed Peeke had already ceased to be green. Secondly, the widow, in common with the body of her sex, possessed an inquiring mind. To have a boarder in the house and know nothing of him but his name was a thing out of all reason.

She afforded the gentleman every possible opportunity to explain; invited him to be communicative by first being communicative herself; in fine, left no means untried to carry her point, short of the rudeness of downright questioning. But all in vain. Ray's reserve remained impenetrable.

No true woman ever yet gave up the pursuit of a secret. Pooled in the use of fair means, Mrs. Peeke determined—we will not say to resort to foul, but to any that promised success.

Mr. Ray, she knew, received a great many letters. On the chance that some of them might happen to be left exposed she took upon herself the daily task of putting his room to rights. But never a letter or scrap of paper was visible. Mr. Ray kept all his papers securely locked up in a portable writing desk, and none of her keys would open it.

But perseverance is apt to be rewarded in the end. One morning the widow found a freshly-opened letter on Mr. Ray's dressing table. With that thirst for knowledge born with the first woman, and which will die only with the last, she caught the missive up and ran her eye over its contents. With a frightened scream she sank into a chair and remained for a time motionless and terror-stricken. Then, springing up, she hastened to her chamber, hurried on her bonnet and rushed from the house, clasping in her hand the terrible letter.

In the course of an hour Mr. Ray returned from his morning walk, and had barely seated himself at his desk when a knock came to the door. It was opened before he had time to answer, and in stalked a rough looking "party" whose face and figure recalled the opening couplet of the gifted McSpatten's "Elegy on a Deceased Flycatcher":

His frame it was rugged, And his nose it was pug.

And in the background stood another of the same ilk.

"May I inquire your business, gentlemen?" asked Mr. Ray, visibly surprised.

"Yes, yer may," replied the foremost man; "we've got a capus fer yer."

"A what?" "A capus—a dockyment ter fetch yer, dead 'r live."

"Do you mean you have come to arrest me?" "Yes, 'st."

"What for?" "Well, 'tarn't for no good I don't reckon; but if you an't done axin' questin's, I'm done answerin' 'em. Jim, help the gen'leman ter make his 'tilet."

Before he had time to resist, had been so minded, Rupert Ray's wrists were manacled. His hat was placed on his head by the attentive Jim and the two constables marched their pris oner off between them.

Ray was taken straight before

Squire Gulliwum, whom he found waiting for him, exhalng an atmosphere of dignity that was positively oppressive.

"I demand an explanation of this outrage," exclaimed the prisoner. "Have a care, young man," admonished the squire, "lest to your other crimes you add the still more heinous one of contempt of court."

"I may at least know of what I am accused," persisted Ray, mastering his anger.

"You'll have an examination to-morrow," replied his honor. "In the meantime it is my duty to commit you."

The mittimus, already made out, was handed to one of the officers, and the line of march taken up for the jail in the order before indicated.

At the hour fixed for the examination a crowd had assembled, the like of which had never been seen in Gutchley since that memorable Fourth of July which Squire Gulliwum had rendered illustrious by delivering an oration on horseback, in full uniform, in the center of a hollow square formed of the "Gory Grays," standing at "present."

With some difficulty the prisoner was ushered through the crowd into the magisterial presence and confronted with his accuser—no other than his fair landlady, whom the very sight of him seemed to give a turn.

The magistrate begged her to compose herself, which she did to some extent, and after being duly sworn, and having chastely kissed the book, she proceeded:

It was not her nature, if she knew herself, to be suspicious. The late Mr. Peeke (tears to his memory) had pronounced this the weak point in her character. Still, she noticed a marked want of openness in her boarder. She had observed, too, occasional symptoms of levity in his conduct. She would scorn to pry into other people's secrets, but when people will leave their letters lying about's in their sometimes. It was in this way she had become informed of an atrocious plot against her own life. Here the witness quite broke down.

"Did you find that paper in the prisoner's apartment?" interrogated the squire, producing the letter before referred to.

"I—I—I—d-d-did!" sobbing. Paper marked and read.

"D-ar Ray: Your idea of killing the widow is capital. Carry it out at once. Will see you in a day or two."

A loud laugh in the rear of the crowd interrupted the proceedings. "Who's that containing the court?" shouted the squire.

"No offense intended," said a jolly, good-looking gentleman, pushing his way forward; "but this is too good!" "Hullo, Quarto!" cried Ray; "a pretty scrape that confounded letter of yours has got me into."

"Do I understand you to be the author of that epistle?" inquired Gulliwum of the stranger.

The latter owned up. "Arrest him as an accomplice!" commanded the squire.

"Beg pardon," interrupted Mr. Meek, the village pastor, "but I happen to know this gentleman. This is Mr. Quarto, the publisher. There must be some mistake here."

"Let him explain it, then," said the squire.

The stranger asked no better. Mr. Ray was an author who was writing a novel for him, the heroine of which was a young widow, whom it had been deemed advisable to kill off in the concluding chapter. And the "bloody business" referred to in the public her's note "had that extent—no more."

Mr. Quarto was cut short by a roar of laughter in which everybody joined but the widow and the squire.

Had Faith. "One of the most remarkable cases of faith I have ever seen," said a well known physician recently, "occurred when I was a student in Philadelphia. I had a patient, an Irishman, who had a broken leg. When the plaster bandage was removed, and a lighter one put in its place, I noticed that one of the pins went in with great difficulty, and I could not understand it. A week afterward in removing this pin I found it had stuck hard and fast, and I was forced to remove it with forceps. What was my astonishment on making an examination to find that the pin had been run through the skin twice instead of through the cloth."

"Why, Pat," said I, "didn't you know that pin was sticking in you?" "To be shure I did," replied Pat, "but I thought you knowed your business, and so I hit me tongue."

Clinched the Matter. Paddy has been telling the story of a big pike he caught—too big to get into the boat, so that he had to be towed behind (with the gaff in it. It must be understood). Then followed this dialogue: "What weight, Paddy?" "Divil a know I know, but he was an ojus baste." "Was that the biggest you ever saw, Paddy?" Then a description of the biggest. "What weight, Paddy?" "Sorra a bit I know—he was a terror." "How big, Paddy?" "Sure, I can't tell to a fut or two, but a man could walk down his throat." On this incredulity; but Paddy "clinched the matter and silenced all controversy" by adding: "Wid his hat on."

No Sleep for Over a Year. The Schull Guardians, County Cork have, according to the West Cork Eagle, discovered a case of insomnia in that workhouse which possibly is without a parallel. A man named Deconroy, who is half-witted, has, it is alleged, been 480 days without sleep, day or night. He is over 70 years of age, eats his meals regularly and is in excellent health.
