BETSY'S SUCCESS

MISS ASH was a maiden lady of so many years that she no longer hesitated to wear her own grey curls, but she was very well off, healthy and upright as a dart, and but for on a peculiarity would have been a happy woman.

In these days, believing too little is the general stumbling block, and many people deny almost everything that can be mentioned, and are extremely proud of having faith in nothing.

But Miss Ash reversed this state of things. From the hour of her rising to that of her retiring, the most alarming things were constantly occurring. The salt was spilled, there were awful cracks in the looking-glasses, and she picked up crooked pins. The bread and cake came cleft out of the oven, and the old servant heard steps on the stairs when no one ascended them.

The street door-bell rang without hands—at least no one saw anyone outside when the door was answered. "Some put their faith in prices," we are told. Miss Ash put hers in fortune-tellers. She had always done so from the days when they spoke confidently of "a fair young man, with his heart in his hand," or a "dark-complexioned young gentleman who fears to speak his mind."

The dark young gentleman Miss Ash had always presumed to be Mr. Tompkins, who had left concealment prey upon his damask cheek for sixty years or so and then departed in consequence of gout.

But with all these weaknesses, Miss Ash was not a bad sort of woman. She did a great deal for the poor; was kind to her old servant; and had taken in, out of charity, a poor young French girl, whose father had died upon the passage to America, and who might have died herself, perhaps, but for the pity Miss Ash had upon her.

She loved her nephew Dick, too; gave him many a present and kept his pockets well filled with small change. She instructed him in the art of table-tipping, in which, having even less veneration than most lads of 15, he soon became an adept, and so great a medium that he could offer his aunt communications in the form of cracks, snags, tips or writing, from all the celebrated personages mentioned in history.

As for the French girl, Estelle Noir, she was superstitious too in her own way, but it was a fearful way, which made her shrink from peering into futurity.

Meanwhile Betsy Baker laughed in her sleeve at the whole of it—table-tipping and all; and racked her brains for some pretext by which she could turn her mistress' love and kindness from the French girl, who had, as she believed, stepped into her place, and might perhaps, deprive her of her long expected legacy.

Now and then, however, even in this ghostly household, the real usurped the place of the unreal and

"I am no thief," cried poor Estelle, "I have it not. I am no thief. I—I take madame's watch! Impossible!"

And there were tears and prayers and vows, but no confession.

Miss Ash would have believed no living tongue that had told the tale, but an angel from heaven had revealed the truth and she could not doubt it. After long hours, in which she strove to force the girl to confess, she took the course she had threatened from the first—called a policeman and sent the girl to prison.

"I must have the watch back," she said, as she tossed upon the pillow. "A night in jail will do it. I shall never have faith in any one again."

Betsy Baker lay awake all night, giddy with triumph, yet half terrified. There was no fair-faced rival in the house now. But she was white-faced and miserable.

At dawn, or a very little after, came a rapping at the door of Miss Ash's house. A policeman stood there.

"About the young rat that took the watch, mum," he said.

"Not exactly," replied the man. "But it points that way."

"I don't wish to prosecute," said Miss Ash, "only to get the watch back."

"Ah," said the man. "Well, there'll be no need. She's dead."

"Dead!" screamed Betsy Baker on the stairs. "Dead! Dead!"

"Hung herself," said the man. "Put her hair up in puffs, first, and made herself neat as a picture. Yes'm—dead."

Betsy Baker gave another cry and threw herself screaming on the floor. She tore her hair, gnashed her teeth and howled and had convulsions; then she averred that she saw Satan standing at her elbow and went off again. Finally coming to herself, she put her hand into her pocket and gave Miss Ash a note, greasy at the edge and smelling of smoke.

"I went to Madame Smith and told her what to say," she said. "I paid her $5 to say it. As for your watch, read that."

And Miss Ash, tearing the envelope, read these lines in Dick's hand: "DEAR AUNT—Please forgive me. I've got your watch. I wanted one so bad. I'll take good care of it, and bring it back when you give me a new one. Your affectionate Dick."

Miss Ash read the words and fainted away. She came to again, however, and went to poor Estelle's funeral, and planted flowers over her grave. And Betsy Baker did not die at once, as she would in a play, though she left the house that day. But fortune-telling had no charms for Miss Ash any more.

the dear boy is going to get on. You shall go with me, Estelle."

"No, madame, please; but I fear that madame, the teller of fortunes." Nevertheless, on the morrow Miss Ash went to Madame Smith. The seeress was in better condition than usual. The gin bottle was full. She smiled upon Miss Ash, and said: "Ah! I've been expectin' of you. The boy is off your hands now. I knowed you'd come."

"Wonderful!" said Miss Ash. Then the seeress reclined in a rocking chair, and was supposed to go into a trance.

"I am a spirit from the realms above," said the seeress, in a few moments. "I an't come for to stay long, only for to give this friend a promise and a warnin'."

"Oh, dear!" said Miss Ash. "The youth will become a very great man," said madame. "He will climb the pinnacles of fame, and when he has clumb 'em, the voice of the nation will select him for the future president."

But there's a dreadful danger before you, although it may be avoided. You have took into your heart and home a foreign person. Beware!

"Now, there," said Miss Ash, who sometimes argued with her spiritual guide, "there you are mistaken, Madame Smith."

"It an't me," said madame suddenly coming to herself. "It's a higher and mightier power than what I am."

"Well, it's mistaken, anyhow," said Miss Ash. "She'll turn out well."

"No, she won't," responded the spirit in possession of Madame Smith. "Look in your secret drawer when you get home and see if your father's gold watch is safe. She opened it last night after you were asleep and took it out. And she's pawned it or sold it. It's gone."

Miss Ash looked horror-stricken. She went home trembling and cold with apprehension and rushed straight to the secret drawer of her secret. The watch she valued so was gone—her father's watch which she had treasured so long.

And Estelle and her nephew Dick alone knew how to open it. Even good Betsy Baker she had never trusted. Estelle was the thief.

The girl sat sewing, and looked up at her with a smile when she called her. "My watch, Estelle—my watch—father's great watch, that I showed you. Where is it? It is gone!"

"Ab, mon Dieu!" cried Estelle. "Gone? Impossible!"

Her face was not that of a guilty person, but Miss Ash never doubted her guilt for one moment.

"Estelle," she said, "the spirits have told me all about it. You took it. Give it back and I'll not punish you."

"Madame," cried poor Estelle, "I have it not. I am no thief. I—I take madame's watch! Impossible!"

And there were tears and prayers and vows, but no confession.
