MACK'S CONVERSION.

One morning an old woman who went out begging professionally found on the steps of the tenement in which she lived a dirty basket with a dirty bit of frothing blanket in it.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good," said the old woman to herself.

"Here I was going to borrow a baby, and when you borrow you've got to pay back somehow, if it is only a baby, and if I don't make by this, why, I can just chuck it away again tomorrow."

The sympathizing public soon saw this respectable female seated at her regular post on the steps of a public building, with the baby in her arms.

The old woman died at last, and there was no one even to cuff him. He earned money by an odd job now and then.

He starved, but not to death. Sometimes he went to the gallery of some cheap theater and saw a play and wished he was a "noble highwayman."

So he grew up to manhood—attained those years when, in other classes of society, fresh hopes awaken, new careers are entered upon.

He always had known how to smoke; he learned by picking up cigar ends from the gutters.

For awhile one or two excellent missionaries felt sure that Mack was going to get "religion."

He went to their big room once or twice, a room in the worst part of the city, hired for the purpose of attracting the most degraded to the meetings.

He ended by stowing the contribution box from under the very nose of his near-sighted guardian and decamped with it to some unknown region.

As for Mack, having escaped to Jersey shores, he spent his ill gotten gains in riot as long as they lasted.

About daylight he came to his senses, and he staggered up and away, had another sleep by the roadside and awoke again to the consciousness that he never was in a worse plight.

He was in a country place. The ways and means possible to him in the city were impossible here.

Lying all night in Jersey mud had given him chills and fever, though he did not know it.

So, when the sun began to glow with noontide heat, he staggered past a white cottage with a paling fence before it.

"You admit that your husband requested and even implored you to execute a deed in his favor?"

"Yes, sor, he did, an shwore at me too."

"And you refused point blank to do so?"

"Yes, sor, I did. I tould him a dade in me hand is wort' two in me husband's pocket.

"Oh, Thomas, how could you?"

"Why, Thomas, I saw him as he passed—a poor, starving soul, if ever I saw one! I've been among the poor enough to know hunger and sickness when I see 'em.

"I thought it was just the sort of a trick boys are always playing," said the old gentleman.

"I was dry," said Mack. "How did I know they was your'n?"

"My boy," said Parson Walker, "if you were hungry or thirsty, you were welcome; if you are either now—and I think you are—come home with me and have some supper.

"What did you think Christianity was?" asked Dr. Walker curiously.

"Well, John," she said as he was leaving her at the hotel, "I think while you are out I will go and do about five minutes' shopping."

"I don't think you ought to try to, my dear," he said in tones of mild reproach.

"Miss Antiqua—My dear, the alarming spread of microbe diseases has resulted in the starting of an antipossess club.

HOW SHE CURED HIM.

Her Husband Was Forgetful, but He Was Taught a Lesson.

A lady in one of the suburban towns has begun with much success to break her husband from forgetting to mail her letters.

"I'll remember," he said, "and don't you forget to let me know where you will meet me. The dinner is at 8, you know, and you can come in on that 6:30. I'd meet you at the train, but I have something extra to do to get ready, and you can't be in a meeting place and let me know."

THE GIRL FOR HIM.

Having Passed the Rigid Examination, He Told Her of His Great Ambition.

"Miss Mildred," said the young man, "you are a sensible girl, and I know you won't mind my speaking to you frankly about a matter of the first importance.

"I am," she replied. "No physical disability of any sort on your parents' or grandparents' part, nothing hereditary, no consumption, insanity, alcoholism, suicidal mania?"

"Nothing of the sort," she murmured. "Have you ever been troubled with rheumatism, inflammation or other-wise, mental failings, such as aberrations, hallucinations, melancholia or hyperamia, cerebral or otherwise, or attacks of vertigo, dots on the eye, no fits, measles, smallpox, contagious diseases of any sort, heart or lung trouble?"

"Nothing," she said. "Then, my own darling," he exclaimed, drawing her yielding form rapidly to his breast, "you are mine, henceforth to walk with me in all the glad sunshine of life, to be bound by the strongest ties of intellectual comradeship, and anon to share with me the fruit of my labor in the field I have chosen. Yes, my treasure," he said proudly as he gazed fondly into the face of the girl who had so successfully passed the searching examination imposed upon her, "if my long years of study are not in vain and I succeed in perfecting my exercising machine for woman I shall place you on exhibition in all of the principal cities of the world."—New York World.

Who She Was.

Two ladies were ushered into their seats in the parquet of a local theater last night and immediately commenced an animated conversation.

"That hair is not natural," said the other. "I wonder she is not ashamed to wear such short dresses," returned the first. Further remarks were cut short, for the gentleman in front could endure it no longer, and turning to one of the ladies said, "Madam, the lady in question is my wife."—Cincinnati Tribune.

The Ratio of Size to Price.

"You don't want that $25 hat, Mary," said Mr. Muggins, who was with his wife in the milliner's store. "It's too big anyhow. Now, if the milliner could only take off four or five feathers it would be all right."

"That's easy," interposed the milliner sweetly, suiting the action to the word. "I take them off so—see? And there you have a love of a little bonnet."

And then, as Mr. Muggins felt for his pocketbook smilingly, thinking of the economy he had effected, she added, "Now it's only $50."—Chicago Tribune.

Fair Warning.

"I wish to warn you, Miss Jones." "Warn me, Mr. Smith?"

"If you put that flower in my buttonhole, I shall be unable to resist the temptation of kissing—there! I told you."

"Sir! How dare you?"—New York Recorder.
