is far ahead of any blood remedy on the market, for it does not irritate. Besides removing impurities, and restoring the run-down system, it cures any blood disease, it matters not how deep-seated or obstinate, which other so-called blood remedies fail to reach. It is a real blood remedy for all blood diseases.

Sir, Asa Smith, of Greencastle, Ind., writes: "I had such a bad case of Scatite Rheumatism that I became absolutely helpless—unable to take my food or handle myself in any way. I bought many patent medicines, but they did not reach my trouble. One day I bought a bottle of S. S. S. and the sound and well, and I now weigh 170."

Wiped Out of the List.

With a sweeping change in the membership of the house comes the disappearance of many familiar faces, and even when the party in power triumphs again a few of the older names may be wiped from the house list. There are many this time who are to go. Price of Louisiana is reckoned one of the older members of the house. He inherited his seat. He was elected to it at the time of the death of his father-in-law, Edward J. Gay, who had a long and honorable record in congress. Price is a high sugar planter. He is a broad shouldered, round faced man who has made friends all over the house regardless of politics, and his fellow members will be sorry to see him go.

Cobb of Missouri is another member of several years' standing who will be shut out March 4. He is a successful merchant, well known on 'change in St. Louis, one of the few survivors of the avalanche of two years ago. He failed of re-nomination.

Crisp of Georgia will be much missed during the coming session, as well as in years to come. He would not have been a member of the house after March 4, but he would have sat in the senate, and his friends would have been in touch with him still. His death is regretted on both sides of the house because, though he did make Tom Reed furious by sending him to his seat, he had a reputation for fair dealing in the chair which was conceded by Republicans and Democrats alike.

Washington of Maryland is not a subject for commiseration or condolence. He leaves the house at the end of this congress, but he has been promoted to a seat in the senate, which he will take with the beginning of the special session to be called by the president in March.

This is the fourth congress in which Pickler of South Dakota has served, and he fell outside the brackets in the last campaign. It is believed that he expects the next administration to do something for him and that he would not object to a place in the interior department.

Settle of North Carolina is another of the patriots who is said to be looking for some reward from the next administration. He has been holding office since 1865, and he has been subjected to the free silver wave. He may get something local—the district attorneyship perhaps.

Cobb of Alabama has been a member for ten years now, and he is famous as the author of "Where am I at?"—a question propounded during a speech he was trying to make on the floor of the house. Mr. Watson owes something to Cobb of Alabama, but unfortunately he is not in position to pay it.

TO BE OUT OF A JOB.

MEN WHO WILL RETIRE AFTER THE COMING SESSION OF CONGRESS.

Some Are Looking For Employment Under the New Administration—Men In Public Life Who Are Sent Into Obscurity—Attractions of Office.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—One of the pitiful things about the re-nomination of congress just after an election is the gathering of the hundred or more politicians who are to be "out of a job" after the 4th of the following March.

There are many of the retiring members who refused to be candidates for re-election, and they perhaps have nothing to regret. There are many who failed to secure a re-nomination. And there is a large number who were beaten for re-election.

It is a source of surprise to most of those who look on at the sessions of congress that able men should want to return again and again to Washington. Their public career offers nothing to their ambition, and its immediate fruits are not very tempting to one who has known them. The congressman is a conspicuous citizen at home, but in Washington he is an interior object, unless, like some one of the dozen leaders I could name, he becomes a national character.

I suppose the distinction at home is what proves attractive. In the busy world of the capital he is reckoned at "one vote." The fact that he is a congressman adds little to his dignity or importance.

With a sweeping change in the membership of the house comes the disappearance of many familiar faces, and even when the party in power triumphs again a few of the older names may be wiped from the house list. There are many this time who are to go. Price of Louisiana is reckoned one of the older members of the house. He inherited his seat. He was elected to it at the time of the death of his father-in-law, Edward J. Gay, who had a long and honorable record in congress. Price is a high sugar planter. This is the fourth congress in which Pickler of South Dakota has served, and he fell outside the brackets in the last campaign. It is believed that he expects the next administration to do something for him and that he would not object to a place in the interior department.

Settle of North Carolina is another of the patriots who is said to be looking for some reward from the next administration. He has been holding office since 1865, and he has been subjected to the free silver wave. He may get something local—the district attorneyship perhaps.

Where Tilly "Aro Al." Cobb of Alabama has been a member for ten years now, and he is famous as the author of "Where am I at?"—a question propounded during a speech he was trying to make on the floor of the house. That question was one of the illustrations used by Tom Watson to make interesting his protest against drunkenness in the house. Mr. Watson owes something to Cobb of Alabama, but unfortunately he is not in position to pay it.

Franklin Bartlett of New York was beaten as a sound money Democrat running in New York city. He has been a member only four years, but he has made a reputation as a representative of the best business and professional interests in New York city.

McCreary of Kentucky came in with Grover Cleveland 12 years ago, and he goes out with him. He is one of the peculiar products of the south. Of courtly manners and great dignity, he has the appearance of knowing enough to run the entire government by himself. Yet he has been a comparatively insignificant figure in congress. He had an excellent reputation as governor of his state, and possibly he failed to impress himself on national affairs because he was overshadowed here. He has always been a favorite of fortune, and in 1892 he was sent to Brussels as one of the American delegates to the international monetary conference. McCreary's public career recalls in some ways that of Voorhees, the senator from Indiana, who is in his last term. When Voorhees was put on the committee of finance, an eminent senator, who has come very close to a nomination for the presidency since and who has held most high and honorable office, said of him: "What Voorhees is a member of the finance committee. Why, he didn't have money enough to pay his fare back to Indiana when he first came to Washington." Yet Mr. Voorhees has since become the chairman of that same finance committee.

I cannot leave McCreary without recalling the time when he sent a riding page all the way to his home in Georgetown, several miles from the capitol, to get his plug of tobacco rather than buy some from the man who kept a stand near the entrance to the house.

Turner of Georgia is a member of 16 years' standing, and people used to say of him that he was the brains of the Georgia delegation. He has not forfeited the reputation either, and he will be missed from the Democratic side of the ways and means committee.

Flynn of Oklahoma will be missed from the floor. He is the one delegate Oklahoma has had since she was made a territory.

It will seem odd to witness an opening of congress without the figure of Harry Rank of Maryland in the foreground. He was elected to fill a vacancy nearly ten years ago, and he has been coming steadily since. In the last election he beat a man named Booze, and now Mr. Booze, whose name should make him ever popular in congress, will succeed to his seat in the house.

Culberson of Texas has been a member for 23 years, and he has been able to maintain his own identity without difficulty in congress. He was elected governor of Texas. Now that the boy has come forward the judge thinks it about time he retired.

Linton of Michigan is the man whose voice was heard whenever the subject of Catholicism could be dragged into a debate. He objected to the statue of Father Marquette in the hall of stamuary at the capitol, and an ungrateful constituency concluded that he was becoming too great a nuisance and sent him into retirement.

Moore of Mississippi is another of the men promoted. He goes into the senate. His career was thought to have been cut short 13 years ago, when Cleveland refused to make him postmaster general.

Morse of Massachusetts is one of the most picturesque figures that have ever decorated the house, and he will have no successor as a funmaker. No one outside the list of his constituents has ever disagreed in Mr. Morse any qualification for public life. And his tactics as a temperance advocate have done the cause little good, if not some harm. Mr. Morse has been coming to congress for eight years.

Reynolds of Pennsylvania is a very rich man with a penchant for entertaining, and he will be missed from social rather than legislative circles. His successor, James K. Young, doesn't care a snap for social life and knows congress like a book, for he has been for many years a newspaper correspondent at the capitol. So, if society loses, congress will gain a little in the change.

Burger Hermann has been representing Oregon for ten years, and his rilly poly figure and boisterous face will be missed from the floor. It was Mr. Hermann who said to Senator Mitchell when the senator made a suggestion for the treatment of a cold: "Kin-son! All right. I'll try it. I've been taking this quinine for almost a week, and it hasn't done me a bit of good." But, though innocuous in some ways, Mr. Hermann is wise in the routine of the congressional life, and he will be a loss to his people.

General Newton M. Curtis of New York is a picturesque figure who has been in congress six years. He is a giant in stature, and he has only one eye. He is one of the few practical agriculturists from the eastern states.

W. W. Bowers of California has been in congress since 1874, and he has been in congress for six years. He will feel lonely in private life.

Charles C. Tamm of Kansas has been a member only four years. He used to be a horse jockey, but he will not return to the turf. He is a lawyer now with a good practice at Topeka.

Mr. Kyle of Mississippi will have to go back to the law after 18 years of office-holding. He has been in the house for six years.

S. M. Stephenson of Michigan will close out eight years of public service in congress with this term, and go back in the senate, and the bank of which he is president.

Other Vacant Chairs.

There will be many other vacant chairs among them, those filled by Arnold (R. I.), Hatcher (Neb.), Byles (Kan.), McCall (Tenn.), Layton (O.), Aldrich (Ill.), Tracy (Mo.), Long (Kan.), Stahle (Pa.), Leighty (Ind.), Willis (Del.), Murphy (Ill.), Murphy (A. T.), Moses (Ga.), Turner (Va.), Kem (Neb.), Blanford (N.
