about him as Young mounted the wall. The water ran down the back of his neck and filled his side pockets, but he was not discouraged. He was on top of the wall fishing with the rope and trying to locate the damsel when half a dozen dark lanterns flashed at the foot of the ladder and six strange men appeared. They had not come to assist in the rescue of Miss Keith, but were in the uniform of the police and spoke with commendable frankness.

Mr. Young was ordered to descend or take a bullet from a revolver, and a minute later the handcuffs were slipped on the trio. There were two other cartridges close by, and presently the three vehicles set out and made a drive of six or seven miles to a stone barn in the suburbs of the city. Here the prisoners were put through the third degree in great shape. When the sergeant of police got through detailing the enormity of the offense they were white as milk and this was the third degree.

These three men had. They began to dicker for their lives. To their great joy the sergeant was willing to listen. He finally admitted that if the convent was heavily reimbursed, the police would put to sea instantly. It must be cash on the nail, though, and no shavins down.

As Mr. Young had got his friends into trouble, it was up to him to get them out. He made a draft on his Spanish banker for $5,000 and handed it over, and as soon as it was cashed the prisoners were turned loose and told to get out. They got the yacht was a thousand miles away when they heard some news. They heard it from two other owners of American yachts. Miss Britomarte Keith was an English girl who was in with a gang of blackies. She was not an inmate of the convent. She had no uncle. She was not watched. She simply marked down her victims and the gang arrived in time to catch them red-handed. The police were not in a little bit. In one year the gang had harvested about $30,000, and had the best thing in the line of craft in all Europe. If it isn't working yet then it is because the members of the gang have become millionaires and retired to their villas.—Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

Some conservatives would have stepped to rescue a girl, but Mr. Young didn't. There was an American girl in distress, and it was his duty to rescue her. He would mount the wall, pull her up with a rope, and then she heard his yacht. He would then steam away and who was to catch him? He had it all planned out before his impulsive companions got back from the bull fight. To his great amazement they were not so impulsive in the matter of rescue as he had looked. They warned him that pulling a good-looking girl out of a Spanish convent with a rope was in the eyes of the church and the law an offense ranking with murder. The girl had looked prepared to him thinking he was some one else, and she might not care to be rescued by him. If he took her from the convent he might have to carry her short and carry her to America. They raised numerous other objections, but Mr. Young was ready to oppose each and every one of them. That's the way with your conservative. Get him off his balance and he'll wobble all over creation and become as set as a mule.

When Mr. Young had announced in cast iron tones that he intended to rescue the girl single-handed, if his friends were afraid to tackle the job with him they could at least offer their other services. One of them was sent to buy a rope, another to look for a ladder, and the third to survey the wall. Young himself saw to the provisioning of the yacht and the hauling of her machinery. He would steam out of port the minute the damsel was aboard, and the light of the 14th came all was in readiness. A vehicle was purchased outright instead of hired. Nothing had transpired to arouse the suspicions of the people in the convent, and it was taken upon a dead-easy thing to make the rescue.

The night was dark and rainy. It was the night of all nights for an American damsel from Spanish convent. Young had only two companions. One drove and was to act as lookout, and the other was to hold the foot of the ladder and help the rescued girl to descend without breaking her neck. Not a dog barked nor a cat miaowed at the angle of the wall was reached. If Sister Mary had done her part, and if Miss Britomarte had not laid away while waiting, then five minutes would see her out of that and a dead-easy thing to make the rescue.

MR. AND MRS. BELLAMY STORER.

What the Shoppers Say. Here's about all you hear in the stores this week.

"From the Baltic to the Black Sea, and the columns of the daily press are filled with reports of citizens beaten, maimed and killed—by the police, by the Cosaks, and by plain 'Hooligans' affiliated with some 'patriotic' society. The reign of terror is supreme.

"Take, for example, a case that happened in the very capital of the empire, under the eyes of newspaper correspondents from all parts of the world and which has been variously reported.

"A regiment of the Empress' Cavalry guards were riding along Sergius street, singing a military song. A working girl on the sidewalk remarked contemptuously that they looked as if they had just taken Port Arthur. Some bystanders caught up the words and shouted: 'Hurrah for the Port Arthur boys!'

"An officer of the guards, riding near the sidewalk, had heard the girl's remark. He ordered six of his troops to seize her. The girl ran and hid in the hallway of an apartment house, but was dragged forth and carried in a cab to the guard house.

"Take her and do what you please," said the officer.

"The men unanimously declined.

"The officer then called seven troopers known as 'the executioners' and commanded them to give the girl twenty-five blows with their whips. She was then allowed to stagger away.

"Though the affair was reported in all the newspapers and the identity of the officer was well known, he has not been called to account. And at the present writing, a month has already elapsed.

"This incident has been widely reported because of its 'news interest.' Scores of similar outrages are occurring in all parts of the empire daily, but never heard of.

"Russia is in a state of revolution. This fact has been officially proclaimed by the government in justification of its policy of repression, the like of which has not been witnessed since the days of John the Terrible.

"Here, C-A-A-A-SH!"

"Toys? You bet; right down in the basement."

"Can't you let me have that train of cars just a little cheaper. The Smash-Price Cash store sell 'em for 98 cents this week. What? Yes, just like those."

"Now, Willie, I want you to stop your teasing. If you aren't a good boy I'll tell Santa Claus not to bring you a SINGLE THING, so there!"

"But, Gracie, darling, mamma cannot afford to pay so much for a coat for you. Now here's one—"

"Aw, quit yer pushing; gimme a chance to get up to de toy counter. Me money's as good as yawn."

"Deary me! You've got such an assortment that it's ten times as hard to pick out just what I want."

"Heavens! Won't I be glad when this Christmas racket is over!"

"Gee, I'm glad Christmas comes but once a year."

"It doesn't make any difference what the floorwalker told you, maulin, we do not exchange any toys this week."

"Oh, dear; I don't know what to buy."

"GOING UP! Step lively, please."

"Here, CAWSE, CAWSE, why don't you pay attention a little livelier?"

"Have you got a pair of sheep that pass in the night?"

"Seckup floor—Cloaks, 800-9-0-10, wimmins underwear AND millinurpel. SECKUP FLO-O-O-OR!"

"Mamma! MA-MA! Boo-boo-ah-h-h! Where's my mamma?"

"Please stop standing on my toes, want you? I'm not a footrest. The 10-0-0-1!"

"CASH GIRL! Take away!"

"Why ain't you got any Santa Claus this year, Mister? It's brought me little brudder in a polkae tee see 'im."

"—and do you know—papa is going to give me just the loveliest diamond ring and gold watch this Christmas. Isn't he a dear, the best?"

"Is THAT the biggest drum I can get here for fifty cents? Why, over at Smith's—"

Probably you've heard a few more expressions from the jostling multitude beside the foregoings—Los Angeles Express.
