EVENING CHAT

BY RUTH CAMERON.

"You may learn to consume your own smoke. The atmosphere is darkened by the murmuring and whispering of men and women over non-essentials, the trifles that are inevitably incident to the hurly-burly of the day's routine. Things cannot always go your way. In such a case, it is better to be suggestive about the minor aggravations, cultivate the gift of taciturnity (about them), and consume your own smoke with an extra draught of hard work so that the dust and soot may not be annoyed by the dust and soot of your complaints."—William Osler.

While waiting for a boat to sail the other day I amused myself by watching one of the large river dredges work.

"Have you ever seen one? How foolishly you course you have. And don't you think it is fascinating to watch the big scow with its wide open mouth slowly descend into the river, slowly swing up again and disgorge a mouthful of mud into the scow with a precision and care that makes the thing seem almost uncanny?"

I do. I can watch that scow scoop for an hour at a time without being bored.

But on this occasion, as I started to tell you when I digressed, I observed something particularly interesting and suggestive about the mud scow.

And that was the fact that while the scow was going down into the water—a process which presumably doesn't take very much power—the chimney belched forth a stream of heavy black smoke. But while the scow, filled with mud, was being slowly lifted to the surface, while every chain was straining and creaking with the weight it was lifting, there was practically no smoke coming out of the chimney.

Isn't that a queer way with people? Those who are really doing something, really lifting some big weight, aren't usually belching forth any useless vapors.

Those who are always just getting ready to do things can be very easily distinguished by the amount of vapor they are sending forth all the time.

It flows silently in a deep channel. It consumes its own smoke. It keeps its counsel while weakness chatters, and folds its arms and waits while the scow is being lifted up and to and fro in a passion of activity.

Think of someone whom you admire for strength of character and "bigness" of soul.

Isn't he or she a quiet person tending to taciturnity rather than talkativeness, to repose and restraint rather than hurry?

Isn't he like the mud scow in action, not sending forth any smoke or vapor, because he is doing something that consumes it?

And if you admire him, can't you be the same.

Every Woman's Hair Should Be Beautiful (From Style and Fashion, New York.) "Beautiful, glossy and lustrous hair is within the reach of every woman who will only try," said Mme. LeClair, the French beauty specialist today. "By trying I mean she must use intelligence as well as be willing to put forth the physical effort required, if your hair is dull, brittle, dry and streaked, it means that you are not taking intelligent care of it.

"Stop your scrubbing, rubbing and rinsing. Soap and water shampoos only give you a headache, keep you indoors the better part of the day, and expose you to catching cold.

"Every woman who wants abundant, lustrous hair should use a dry shampoo. Mix four ounces of powdered orris root with four ounces of therax. Sprinkle about a tablespoonful of this mixture upon the head; then brush the powder thoroughly through the hair.

"This cleans the scalp and hair and gives the hair a beautiful glossy lustre—in addition to making it light and fluffy. Therax encourages the growth of hair."

Cowen immediately asked the Wellington marshal to arrest Wilcox and hold him until he could arrive.

This morning Sheriff Duckworth was informed that while at first Wilcox denied his identity he finally confessed that he was the man the Los Angeles detective was looking for. He will be taken back to California for trial. Dr. Graham was released from the county jail yesterday.

Wilcox is a carpenter and is accused of leaving Los Angeles with $300 belonging to the union of which he was treasurer.
