

FIGURING UP THE OVER.

What Our Veterans Have to Say About Their Old Campaigns.

IN THE VALLEY.

Charge of the 8th N. Y. Cav. at Warrenton.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: It was my good fortune to be present a few months ago at a meeting which took place at Warrenton, Ore., and which was a most interesting one. It was a reunion of our late war men who had previously met in a number of the most interesting places that occurred during our civil war, but who were now reunited in a more permanent and substantial way. It was a meeting of the truest kind.

BATTLE OF JONESBORO

As Seen by an Orderly at Gen. Howard's Headquarters.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: At the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., when Sherman flanked the rebels out of Atlanta, your humble servant was acting as a courier for Capt. Rice, Chief Engineer of the Tennessee, at that time commander of Gen. O. O. Howard's division. During the advance Capt. Rice, Gen. Howard and staff were following the skirmish-line closely, and as we passed a humble log cabin by the roadside we saw a rebel sharpshooter lying in the open of death in the yard. A crowd soon gathered around, and it was learned that he had climbed a large limb of a tree that stood in the yard and was picking off our skirmish-line as they advanced slowly through the adjoining woods and fields; but some keen-eyed Yankee saw the smoke of his rifle, and, taking deliberate aim, sent a ball crashing through the window and felled him out of his hiding-place, and his comrades had retreated and left him weltering in his blood. The dust in the yard was two or three inches deep, and as the blood and brains oozed from his head and face, making a picture horrible in the extreme. Some cold-blooded booby on the ground who had a tobacco pipe in his mouth, and such sights become that it produced only a momentary diversion. The roar of musketry was sounding at the front and the flanks and we hastened on, leaving the wounded, which were being brought back in considerable numbers. Gen. Howard, after going down the hill, came to a little creek spanned by a bridge, and part of the staff were on the bridge when a shower of musketry broke loose from the rebel skirmish-line, and the General waited until a few regiments of infantry had crossed.

FORT SANDERS.

The Troops that Defended the Stronghold at Knoxville.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: Having read considerably later in different papers about the troops that defended Fort Sanders, Knoxville, East Tenn., I wish to say a word about it through your paper. One officer in high command has said, and ought to know, that the troops defending the fort were the 70th N. Y. (Highlanders), 29th Mass., and a detachment of the 2d Mich. Cavalry. The New York paper says the whole credit to the 70th N. Y. The correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says that they consisted of the 79th N. Y., four companies of the 100th Pa. (Roundheads), and four companies of the 2d Mich. Cavalry. Having been one of Gen. Ferrero's Orderlies at the time, and having been in the fort almost every day, some of the officers which I doubt if any of these authors had, I am able to state exactly what forces were there.

KILPATRICK'S RAID.

Gen. Wiley Replies to the Strictures of M. W. H.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: Allow me to say a word or two in reply to the stricture of M. W. H. Magdon, Ill., which appeared in your issue of March 26. He says, "All I write is written from memory, and I have no other authority to prove the excellence of his memory, and acknowledges that he does not know the number of the division he is supposed to have been in at that time, but believes the number I mentioned is correct."

A BALKY MULE.

A Prescription which Started Him Running Down the Mountain.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: On reading the "misadventures of an Ohio Captain," by Rollin L. Jones, in THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE, I was reminded of a mule which I saw at daybreak on the morning of the 10th of April, 1862, at the battle of Fort Fisher. The mule was a large one, and was being led by a man who was a member of the 1st Michigan Cavalry. The mule was balky, and would not move, and the man was very angry. I saw the mule and the man, and I saw the man's face as he looked at the mule. The mule was a large one, and was being led by a man who was a member of the 1st Michigan Cavalry. The mule was balky, and would not move, and the man was very angry.

THE TOTAL LOSS IN THAT DIVISION WAS 31 OF ALL RANKS KILLED, WOUNDED, AND MISSING.

THE 5th, while awaiting the onslaught of Stevenson's Division of Johnnies, woke the echoes with that grand piece, "Battle Cry of Freedom," which was taken up on our right and left.

SPRIGG CARROLL.

Humorous Traits in "Old Bricktop's" Character.

EDITOR NATIONAL TRIBUNE: Much has been said about the bravery and coolness of Gen. S. Carroll, but his humorous traits have not as yet been dwelt upon. He would have his fun, and he had a staff that joined in heartily.

FROM ALERT COMRADES ALL ALONG THE LINE.

The Monetary Fight.

William F. Yeoman, Co. E, 8th Ill. Cav., Silver Creek, Neb., says that Comrade Goodheart is in error when he says, "Early on July 7, Col. Clendenin with 300 Pennsylvania cavalry (his own) and the 2d Michigan Cavalry, Col. Clendenin commanded the 8th Ill. Cav. at that time and led it on that day, of which fact Comrade Goodheart seems to have forgotten. It was on the 7th of July, 1862, that the 8th Ill. Cav. was ordered to go round and plenty to spare on that occasion."
