THE PRINTER AND HIS TYPES.

The following beautiful extract is from the pen of Benjamin F. Taylor, the printer-poet:

Perhaps there is no department of enterprise whose details are less understood, by intelligent people, than the "art preservative"—the achievement of types. Every day their life long they are accustomed to read the newspaper, and find fault with its statements, its arrangements, its looks; to plume themselves upon the discovery of some rough and acrobatic type that gets into a frolic and stands upon its head; or of some waste letter or two in it—but of the process by which the newspaper is made, of the myriads of motions and the thousands of pieces necessary to its composition, they know little and think less. They imagine they discourse of a wonder, indeed, when they speak of the fair white carpet, woven for thought to walk on, of the rags that fluttered on the back of the beggar yesterday.

But there is something more wonderful still. When we look at the hundred and fifty-two little boxes, somewhat shaded by the touch of ink fingers, that compose the printer's "case," noiseless, except the clicking of the types, as one by one they take their places in the growing line—we think we have found the marvel of the art. We think how many fancies in fragments there are in the boxes, how many atoms of poetry and eloquence the printer can make here and there, if he only had a little chart to work by, how many facts in a small "handful" how much truth in chaos. Now he picks up the scattered elements until he holds in his hands a stanza of "Gray's Elegy," or a monody on Grimes, "All Buttoned up Before." Now he sets "Puppy Missing" and now "Paradise Lost;" he arrays a bride in "small caps," and a sonnet in "nonpareil;" he announces the languishing live, in one sentence—transposes the word and deplores the days that are few and evil in the next.

A poor jilt ticks its way slowly into the printer's hand, like a clock just running down, and a strain of eloquence marches into line letter by letter. We fancy we can tell the difference by hearing by the ear, but perhaps not. The types that told a wedding yesterday announce a burial to-morrow—perhaps the same letters. They are the elements to make a world of—these types are a world with something in it as beautiful as Spring, as rich as Summer, and as grand as Autumn flowers that front cannot wilt. Fruit that shall ripen for all time. The newspaper has become the log book of the age. It tells at what rate the world is running; we cannot find our "reckoning" without it. True the green grocer may bundle up a pound of candies in our last expressed thoughts, but it is only coming to base uses, something that is done times innumerable.

We console ourselves by thinking that one can make of that newspaper what he cannot make of living oaks—a bridge for time, that he can fling over the chasm of the dead years and walk safely back upon the shadowy sea into the far past. The singer shall not end his song, nor the soul be eloquent no more. The realm of the press is enchanted ground. Sometimes the editor has the happiness of knowing that he has defended the right, exposed the wrong, protected the weak; that he has cheered somebody's solitary hour, made somebody happier, kindled a smile upon a sad face, or a hope in a heavy heart. He may meet with that sentiment many years after; it may have lost all charms of its paternity, but he feels affection for it. He welcomes it as a long absent child. He reads it as for the first time, and wonders if indeed he wrote it, for he has changed since then. Perhaps he could not give utterance to the sentiment now—perhaps he would not if he could. It seems like the voice of his former self calling to his parents, and there is something mournful in his tone.

He begins to think—to remember why he wrote it, who were his readers then, and how much he has changed. So he muses, until he wonders if that thought of his will continue to float after he is dead, and whether he is looking upon something that will survive him. And then comes the sweet consciousness that there is nothing in the sentence that he could wish unwritten—that is a better part of him—a shred from the garment of immortality he shall leave behind him when he joins the "innumerable caravan," and takes his place in the silent halls of death.

THE TRUE LIFE ON EARTH.

The following beautiful extract is cut from from one of our exchanges. Of its authorship we are not advised. It is worthy a high place in the vocabulary of good philosophy and excellent composition. We commend it to the perusal of our readers:

"There is, even on this side of the grave, a haven where the storms of life break not, or are but in gentle undulations of the unrippled and unmirrored waters—an oasis, not in the desert, but beyond it; a rest, profound and blissful as that of the soldier returned forever from the hardships, the dangers and the turmoil of war, to the bosom of that dear domestic circle of whose blessings he never prized at half their worth until he lost them.
"This haven, this rest, this oasis, is a serene old age. The tired traveler has abandoned the dusty, crowded and jostling highway of life for one of its shadiest and least-noted by-lanes. The din of traffic and worldly strife has no longer magic for his ear; the myriad foot fall on the city's stony walk is but noise or nothing to him now. He has run his race of toil, or trade, or ambition. His day's work is accomplished, and he has come to enjoy tranquil and untroubled, the splendor of the sunset, the milder glories of late evening. Ask not whether he has or has not been successful, according to the vulgar standard of success. What matters it now whether the multitude has dragged his chariot, rousing the air with idolizing acclamations, or howled like wolves upon his track, as he fled by night from the fury of those he had wasted his vigor to serve? What avails it that broad lands have rewarded his toil, or that all has at the last moment been stricken from his grasp? Ask not whether he brings into retirement the wealth of the Indies or the poverty of the bankrupt; whether his couch be of down or of rushes; his dwelling a hut or a mansion. He has lived to his purpose, indeed, if he has not long since realized that wealth and renown are the transient ends of exertion, not their absence the conclusive proof of ill fortune. Whoever seeks to know if his career has been prosperous and brightening from its outset to its close, if the evening of his days shall be genial and blissful, should ask not for broad acres, nor towering edifices, nor laden coffers. Perverted old age may grasp these with the yielding clutch of insanity, but they add to his cares and anxieties, not to his enjoyment. Ask rather: Has he mastered and harmonized his erring passions? Has he lived a true life?"

"A true life! Of how many lives does each hour knell the conclusion, and how few of them are true ones. The poor child of sin and shame and crime, who terminates her clouded being in the early morning of her scarce budded yet blighted existence; the desperate felon, whose blood is shed by the community as the dread penalty of its violated laws; the miserable debauchee, who totters down to his loathsome grave in the spring time of his years, by the fullness of his feasting iniquities—these the world valiantly affirms have not lived true lives! Fearless and righteous world, how profoundly and discriminating are their judgments! But the idolator of self, who devotes all his moments, his energies, his thoughts to schemes which begin and end in personal advantage; the grasping of gold and lands and tenements, the devotee of pleasure; the man of ignoble and sinister ambition, the woman of frivolity, extravagance and fashion; the idler; the gambler; the voluptuary—on all these and their myriad compeers, while born on the crest of the advancing billow, how gentle is the reproof, how charitable the judgment of the world! Nay, does it not pick its way daintily, cautiously and insidiously through the midst of drunkard making and national faith breaking?"

"A true life must be simple in all its elements. Antimated by one grand and ennobling impulse, all lesser aspirations find their proper places in harmonious subservience; simplicity in taste, in appetite, in habits of life, with a corresponding indifference to worldly honors and aggrandizement, is the natural result of the predominance of a divine and unselfish idea. Under the guidance of such a law of nature, like gravitation, it is vice alone that seems unaccountable, monstrous, almost miraculous. Purity is felt to be as necessary to the mind as health to the body, and its absence alike the inevitable source of pain. A true life must be calm. We wear out our energies in strife for gold or fame, and then wonder alike at the cost and the worthlessness of the meed. How sloth is jostled by gluttony, and pride wrestled by avarice, and ostentation bearded by meanness! The soul which is not large enough for the indwelling of one virtue, affords lodgment and scope and arena for a hundred vices; but their warfare can not be indulged with impunity. Agitation and wretchedness are the inevitable consequences, in the midst of which the flame of life burns flaringly and swiftly to its close.

"A true life must be genial and joyous. Tell me not, pale anchorite, of your ceaseless rigils, your fastings, your scourgings. The man who is not happy in the path he has chosen, has chosen amiss."
HENRY C. EVERTS—The clerk of Mr. Leiby, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, was not widely known in the Territory. He is well spoken of by the people of La Paz, and in the Solano (Cal.) Press we find the following reference to him:
"Mr. Everts was the son of the late Dr. T. C. Everts, and a brother of Mrs. D. M. Stockman, of Suisun. For many years he was connected with various express companies in northern California, and for a few years past has been a clerk in the office of Charles Maltby, Superintendent of Indian Affairs. He was a young man of good business qualities, and highly esteemed. His untimely death will be regretted by all who knew him. He was a native of Indiana, about thirty-three years of age, and has a brother, sisters and mother residing in Napa county, and several relatives in other portions of the State."

THE GREAT TONTO BASIN IN ARIZONA.—The Commissioner of Agriculture has received a communication from Lieutenant Du Bois, Fourteenth United States Infantry, dated at Fort McDowell, Arizona Territory. This post, established in 1865, is on the Rio Verde, or San Francisco river, near its junction with the Salinas river. The Government reservation, comprising 24 square miles, lies on both sides of the river, and a farm was started this spring, an acreage four miles in length being constructed for its irrigation. Corn and sorghum was planted, and at the date of the letter, was harvesting; the corn-stalks averaging 15
