

THE WHIG STANDARD.

WHAT IS GLORY, WHAT IS FAME?

BY WILLIAM MOTHERWELL.

What is glory? What is fame?
The echo of a long lost name;
A breath, an idle hour's brief talk;
The shadow of an arrogant thought;
A flower that blossoms for a day,
Dying next morrow!
A stream that hurries on its way,
Singing of sorrow!
The last drop of a bootless shower,
Shed on a sere and leafless bower;
A rose, stuck in a dead man's breast—
This is the World's fame at the best.

What is Fame? and what is glory?
A dream—a jester's lying story,
To tickle fools withal, or be
A theme for second infancy;
A joke scrawled on an epitaph;
A grin at Death's own ghastly laugh;
A vision that tempts the eye,
But mocks the touch—nonentity;
A rainbow, substanceless as bright,
Fitting for ever
O'er hill-top to more distant height,
Nearing us never;
A bubble blown by fond conceit,
In very sooth itself to cheat;
The watch-fire of a phrenzied brain;
A fortune that to lose were gain;
A word of praise, perchance of blame;
The wreck of a time-banded name—
Ay, this is Glory!—this is Fame!

WOMAN.

Woman—lovely woman—it is she who hears the first cry we utter in the world. It is woman from the fountain of life at whose breast we inhale our first nourishment. It is woman who tends our helpless infancy, and reads and supplies our untutored wants. And when we reach mature childhood, it is on woman's lap the head is reclined—by woman's hands we are clothed—and by woman's voice and animating looks we are cheered on in our course in the acquisition of that useful knowledge which shall fit us for the active duties and rational enjoyments of after years. It is the speaking glance and beaming smile of woman that in early childhood unfolds and develops into full blown fragrance the buds of affection in the manly bosom. It is woman who then becomes the companion and helpmate of man in the duties and trials of life—who cheers us when discouraged, consoles us in disappointments and sorrows, and brightens the blessings Providence scatters in the pathway of life. When sickness lays its iron hand upon the frame, and prostrates us on the bed of languish and pain, it is woman's hand that presses the fevered brow, and wipes the clammy sweat from the countenance; that administers our medicines, and renders comfortable the couch on which we lie. And when all the world is hushed and still in repose around us, still it is woman's almost noiseless step that is heard lightly moving around the silent room, and watching our broken slumbers and irregular breathing. And when we grapple with the King of Terrors, it is on woman's bosom, where first we were cradled in infancy, that the son, husband, or father, yields up the departing spirit, and it is woman whose tears then fall fast and thick upon the marble features of the dead. She follows us to our last home, and when the clouds fall over the coffin lid with hollow sound, her heart reverberates most loudly with the soul-rending echoes; and as she retires from that dear spot, it is in her heart our memory is most fondly enshrined. In birth—through life—in death—woman is our best nurse, our nearest companion, and our dearest friend.

A FORAGING RUSE.

"By my soul, if the little corporal (Napoleon) was in these cursed mountains he himself would become a plunderer for his corps, defendant;" and the grenadier stopped in front of a green meadow, resembling an emerald encased in rocks. "Nobody is in sight," said he, looking round and attentively listening; "I see a calf, rather lean it is true, but in war we must not be too nice. Confound it, how thin the poor beast is. Spanish rascals, is it thus you fatten the cattle? I must, however, take charge of you my starveling, and the calf was soon on the road to the bivouac. "Caution, however," murmured the grenadier, "the captain is a fellow that won't listen to reason on this subject; how shall I act? It is not easy to introduce my friend unobserved into the bivouac. If I had but my great coat, I would with that and my cap contrive to make a soldier of him; we would march in, arm in arm. He would pass for a conscript, the two species much resemble each other. Ah! I have a bright thought," and thrusting his hand hurriedly into his pocket, he bounded with joy at finding a piece of stout string, one end of which he tied round the foot of the calf and fastened the other to his own ankle, taking the precaution to leave a respectful distance between the captive and himself. Scarcely had he completed this delicate operation before he observed at the end of the road his dreaded captain, who rapidly approached him on horseback, enveloped in a cloud of dust. Fortunately, this benevolent mist completely concealed the leading string of the passively following quadruped. "Where do you come from?" vehemently exclaimed the officer. "But a short distance from hence, sir," said the soldier with imperturbable assurance. "Why does this calf follow you step by step?" said the impetuous officer. "How, my captain, can you expect me to ask him this question when I know not a single word of Spanish? I suppose the calf is following me from pure friendship, or a wish to become better acquainted with me." A strange fancy," said the officer, putting his spurs into his horse, and quitting the spot at full speed. The grenadier laughed in his sleeve, joined his comrades with his friendly prisoner, and related the scientific manner in which he had secured the booty and humbugged his captain.

Military Anecdotes.

Anecdote.—An anecdote is related of an old gentleman in Charles county, proverbial of his careful and saving habits. He had mislaid a key, and it gave him no little uneasiness. One morning while engaged in family prayer, no doubt very fervently, he bethought himself of the key, and stopping in the midst of the prayer, exclaimed, "I recollect where the key is; I'll go and get it and return to my morning devotion!"—Marlboro' Gazette.

How to Wash Calicoes.—Somebody says—"Put in a small quantity of salt—say a table-spoonful to a common sized tub of suds—and the colors of printed calicoes will remain as bright as before they were washed."

OLD MONTGOMERY AWAKE!

MONTGOMERY COUNTY CLAY CLUB.—Pursuant to previous notice, a respectable meeting of the Whigs of Montgomery county assembled in Rockville on Thursday, the 16th inst., and were duly organized by inviting C. D. Warfield, Esq., to take the chair, and John Braddock, jr., to act as secretary.

Richard I. Bowie, Esq., one of the committee previously nominated for that purpose, submitted the following able preamble and series of resolutions, which, after being prefaced by some introductory remarks, were, on motion of Mr. Waite, unanimously adopted by the meeting.

The committee appointed by the Clay Club of Montgomery county, to prepare and submit to them the mode of proceeding best calculated to accomplish the great end of their organization—the election of Henry Clay—and as a part of that organization, to take especial care to devise ways and means of diffusing correct information of the policy and principles of their candidate, and dispelling the prejudices so sedulously cherished against him, respectfully offer the following suggestions:

The election of Henry Clay to the Presidency can only be effected by enlisting in his cause the generous sympathies of the people of the United States; by arousing their gratitude for his past services, awakening their admiration of his genius, and exhibiting the noble qualities of head and heart, which challenge the respect of his enemies and win him troops of friends.

Nor in doing this, are we engaged in manorship; but in "rendering unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's." There have been epochs in the annals of all nations, when the greatest good or the greatest evil which could befall them was the success or the defeat of individuals—citizens, whose lives were so identified with the prosperity of the State, that whatever affected their political career, was a blessing, or a blight, to the millions that surrounded them. Such is the candidate of the Whig party. Circumstances have moulded the man for the crisis which demands his calm and sagacious foresight; his energetic firmness; his incorruptible integrity; his enlarged experience; and, above all, his ardent patriotism.

Nursed in the lap of the mother of Statesmen (Virginia); inspiring the spirit of the Revolution from its surviving sages; transplanted in youth to the valley of the Mississippi, (the mother of States,) no narrow sectional impulse, no selfish scheme of personal aggrandisement has ever limited the horizon of his views; but expanded as the continent, bold and majestic as the mighty river of the West, have been the scope and current of his policy.

He is emphatically the American Statesman. Forty years service in the councils of his country have matured the rich and varied intellect with which nature endowed him.

Amidst the perils and vacillating fortunes of war, his voice encouraged the weak and strengthened the stout-hearted; never quailing in the darkest hour of difficulty and distress. In the negotiations for peace, his broad American feeling, watched alike over the interests of the east and the west; insisting with equal tenacity for the rights of the fisherman on the banks of Newfoundland, and of the planter on the Mississippi; maintaining the inviolability of our flag upon every sea; making the stars and stripes the insignia of freedom throughout the world.

When civil discord brooded o'er the land, and the sword was half unsheathed by citizen against citizen, his wisdom subdued the strife and cemented with new bonds the antagonistic interests.

When American agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, languished and almost expired under the weight of foreign competition and low wages, his penetration detected the cause, his sagacity suggested the remedy.

When an overflowing treasury tempted the Federal Executive to corrupt the people with their own gold, his influence mainly restored it to the States, its legitimate and proper guardians.

When the common property of all the States, the domain purchased by their blood and treasure, was hawked by politicians as the price of popularity—tendered to the new States as a gift, by his rivals—his justice and magnanimity, superior to the bribe, rebuked in emphatic terms the wrong and maintained the rights of the whole Union: Therefore,

Resolved, That the object to be effected, depending upon the will of a majority of the people of the United States, can only be accomplished by individual exertion, operating on masses of our fellow-citizens through all those channels by which the public mind is most readily swayed; and the machinery by which these means are most universally and immediately commanded, is that best suited to the purpose.

Resolved, That the Clay Clubs, in the opinion of this committee, should be so organized as to impose some active and positive duty on every member, the regular and satisfactory discharge of which, however humble or simple its character, should confer honor on the agent; and the neglect of which, should meet with corresponding disgrace.

Resolved, That when citizens are enlisted in the cause of their country, to defend and protect it from the rule of evil advisers, or the effects of bad councils or systems of Government, the obligation upon every man to do his duty, is not less solemn or sacred, than if he stood a sentinel on the out-posts of an enemy.

Resolved, That in the contest which is now waging for the ascendancy in the national councils, between the Whigs and their adversaries, neutrality in a mind of ordinary capacity and directness, is impossible—so broad are the differences which mark their political creeds; and where neutrality is impossible, inertness is unparadisable; as to be sluggish in a good cause, is worse than honest zeal in a bad one.

Resolved, That in order to provide ways and means of diffusing correct information of the policy and principles of Henry Clay, and dispelling the prejudices so sedulously cherished against him, it is recommended to each member of the Club to subscribe to some leading Whig paper, and read and circulate the same as widely as possible.

Resolved, further, That a fund be raised by subscription to be devoted to the purchase of such books and documents as the Board of General Welfare shall select, containing full and authentic information of the subjects in controversy between our political adversaries and ourselves, and especially such as illustrate the life and services of Henry Clay.

The committee therefore recommend that the officers of this Club consist of a president, four vice-presidents, and two secretaries, and a treasurer, to be elected by the Club at its next meeting, the president and vice-presidents to be taken from different election districts of the county. The residue of the Club to be divided into five divisions according to the several election districts in which they reside, to be numbered respectively as the said districts are.

The presidents and vice-presidents ex officio shall constitute a board, (any three of whom to be a quorum,) to superintend the general welfare of the cause, and advise such measures as in their judgment should be adopted, which board shall meet once a fortnight.

The vice-president shall communicate to the board any matter requiring attention in his election district; shall preside at the meetings of the Club in the absence of the president, and if not able to attend, their place shall be supplied by a vice-president pro tem, to be elected by the division.

The members of each division shall hold a meeting once every fortnight in such part of their election district as they think proper.

Each member shall endeavor to enlist as many friends as possible, who shall be admitted by a vote of the division, which admission shall constitute them members of the Club upon such terms as the division shall prescribe.

Each division shall elect one or more advocates, whose duty it shall be to inform themselves upon all political questions interesting to the Club or division; to attend all meetings in the district where the principles of the Whig party are to be discussed, and sustain and advance them as far as in their power; and at every meeting of the divisions some valuable political article shall be read and distributed.

The secretaries shall attend the meetings of the Club, keep minutes of the proceedings, preserve the documents ordered to be filed, and conduct the correspondence.

The treasurer shall receive and distribute the funds of the Club.

Each member of a division shall be charged with ascertaining the political state of his immediate neighborhood, the number of votes therein, the prevailing opinions favorable or unfavorable, and particularly the objections which are mainly relied on by our adversaries, and report at every meeting.

The following gentlemen were duly chosen officers of the Clay Club of Montgomery county:

Henry Harding, Esq., President.
A. Bowie Davis, William T. Glaze, James N. Alnutt, Thomas Gettings, Vice-presidents.
Richard I. Bowie, Corresponding Secretary.
Robert W. Carter, Recording Secretary.
William Alby, Treasurer.

On motion of Mr. Waite, every Whig in Montgomery county be appointed a delegate to the Ratification Convention to assemble in Baltimore on the 2d of May next.

On motion of John Braddock, sen., a fund be appropriated to the circulation of Whig newspapers. The following papers are recommended: "The American Whig," Baltimore; "Maryland Journal," Rockville; and "The Whig Standard," Washington City.

On motion of Dr. F. Waters, the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Maryland Journal, American Whig, and Whig Standard.

It was then moved and seconded that the meeting adjourn.

CHAS. D. WARFIELD, Chairman.
JOHN BRADDOCK, Jr., Secretary.

The above engraving is intended to represent a plough invented and patented by the subscriber. The object of this plough is to plough all mellow lands without increasing the power, and to do double the work of the common plough in use, and also to avoid the injury done to lands by working them too wet, which is often the case when a field is sown, and it rains and continues wet; the farmer, from the situation of his grain laying on the surface, is compelled to proceed, having necessarily sown the field before it could be cross-harrowed, and this way injures both his crops and land. Often stirred and loose porous lands absorb and retain most moisture, which object is most speedily effected by the use of my plough. It is also intended to plough in wheat at twice the rate of the common plough, and burying the same at a uniform depth in the earth, which prevents the frosts injuring it, and leaves the land in a better state, and also to finish as you proceed; the farmer sows one or more lands, ploughs it in, and it is completed; should it rain, he can delay until his lands are in good working order, and by these means preserve his lands, and increases his crops. The weight of my middle sized plough is 35 pounds when single, and 70 when double, and of very light draught, and shifts the beam so as to take any desired width of furrow, and shifts from a double to a single plough, and has a wrought share and coulter. This plough has been tested, and performs well. Any person desiring further information can obtain it by addressing

WHEN WILL THE PUBLIC CEASE TO BE HUMBLED?—P. W. BROWNING, Merchant Tailor, in opposition to all humbuggers, most respectfully requests members of Congress and strangers visiting the city, not to purchase their clothing before calling to examine his large and superior stock of French and English Cloths, Cassimeres, and Vestings of the latest styles; as he is prepared to prove to them, that he is selling the same article of clothing from 20 to 25 per cent cheaper than certain dry goods storekeepers that wish to take the trade out of the tailors' hands by holding out false pretences to the public, that they are selling suits of clothes from $10 to $20 cheaper than they can be purchased elsewhere. I want to know how it is possible for any set of men that have no practical knowledge of the business, to sell clothes cheaper than practical tailors—men that know no more about making coats than they know about laying brick—notwithstanding all their arrangements with the celebrated tailors to cut and make their clothes, and their great facilities for buying goods, unless they have a facility for buying with out paying for them? I am determined to undersell them, and not to sacrifice my trade to such an avaricious set of men until the last dollar is gone! All I ask is for you to call and examine for yourselves.
