Rules and Requirements for Aerial Circuits for Electric Light, Power or Railway, Telephone or Telegraph Circuits on Public Roadways and Highways.

In the construction of aerial circuits for the above purposes, the following rules and requirements must be observed on and after this date:

- POLES.
1. Application must be made on proper blanks to the Superintendent of Public Works for permission to erect.
  2. Use of poles is limited to the purpose for which they are erected.
  3. Poles erected within town or city limits, other than those for electric railway purposes must not be less than forty feet in length and twelve inches in diameter at butt.
  4. Space between poles must not exceed 100 feet.
  5. Poles subjected to special strains must be properly guyed or braced. Guy lines are not to be secured to trees.
  6. Poles must be stamped with owner's name and numbered.
  7. Private signal lines must not be placed on poles for public service without permission.
  8. Where curb lines are established, poles are to be placed inside of and tangent to the curb line.
- CROSS ARMS.
1. Must be chamfered.
  2. For high potential lines should be dipped in oil.
  3. When carrying more than two lines must be braced with galvanized iron braces.
  4. Must be secured with galvanized iron bolts; not lag screws.
  5. Where lines are dead-ended double cross-arms should be used.

- WIRES.
1. Main conductors for electric light or power on roads and highways must not be less than No. 6, B. & S.
  2. Service wires on roads and highways must not be less than No. 6, B. & S.; in private grounds not less than No. 8, B. & S., and rubber covered.
  3. Electric light and power lines must be kept clear of foliage. Supply companies are responsible for lines on roads and highways, and owners on private grounds.
  4. The lower limit of wires on roads and highways is that of the electric railway trolley wire, twenty one feet above the level of the track.
  5. Where wires for various purposes are run on the same poles, or lines cross, the following order will be kept, beginning with the highest:
    - (a) Signal wires.
    - (b) Telephone and telegraph.
    - (c) High potential alternating current.
    - (d) Arc light.
    - (e) Low potential alternating current.
    - (f) Direct current, constant potential.
  6. Telephone and similar wires must be protected by dead insulated guard wires or wires from possibility of contact with other conducting wires. Must not be placed on same cross-arm with electric light or power wires, and when placed on the same poles with such wires the distance between the inside pins on each cross-arm must not be less than twenty-six inches.
  7. Wires crossing flat roofs must clear same by at least seven feet. Wires crossing pitched roofs must clear ridge over which they pass, or to which they are attached by at least one foot.
  8. Service wires must be run as nearly as possible in horizontal lines from poles to point of attachment to buildings.
  9. All joints in all wires must be soldered.

- INSULATORS.
1. All insulators for high potential circuits must be of glass and triple petticoat.
  2. Insulators for other electric light and power circuits must be glass and double petticoat.
  3. Service wires for electric light or power, where secured to the outside of buildings, must be carried on double petticoat, glass insulators.

The term "high potential" covers any current between 550 volts and 3,500 volts.

Nerve Tonic

Builds up the System. Strengthens.

This warm climate is very trying to all. The blood easily becomes impure and the nervous system greatly debilitated. But you can retain your health and keep your nervous system strong.

"Upon arriving in Western Australia three years ago, I found that my blood was in bad condition and my general system all run down. I suffered greatly, especially from indigestion. I had heard so much about AYER'S Sarsaparilla."

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

I thought I would try it. I did so, and only three bottles restored my strength, built up my system, and cured my dyspepsia. And I have also found it a great nerve tonic.

A PATRIOTIC SPEECH.

Response of a Naturalized Englishman at an American Banquet.

W. C. Cook at the Washington Memorial dinner responded to the toast "Our Naturalized Citizens," in the following words:

To the player—standing before the footlights, his lines well rendered—the applause of an admiring audience is very sweet! Doubly sweet is the spontaneous outburst of public flattery which greets the actor in life's drama ere his lines begin! As a modest American citizen, allow me to thank you for your kindly compliment, and, at the same time, to assure you that the small sized 6 3/4 hat which recently covered this thinly thatched pate of mine, will not prove one hairsbreadth too small for me when I come to put it on again.

Amongst the many wise sayings of the people of the far East is the following: "Most wise is he, thrice blessed is he, who diggeth a well, begeth a son and planteth a tree." If this be true of the Hindu, it is equally true of the ordinary, every day white man, therefore, how blessed indeed was that stalwart Virginian to whom God sent a son, on this 22nd day of February one hundred and seventy years ago. Could he but have read the future of that puling, pink skinned, beswaddled mite of humanity, could he have realized to what heights of power, of dignity, and fame his offspring was destined to soar; I think that he would have fallen upon his knees and covered his face in reverent awe at the importance of the event. There are some men, who, on occasions of a like character, are very apt to raise their hands and their eyes to Heaven, out of sheer gratitude and thankfulness of heart; that "it wasn't twins" this time.

We have been reminded several times this evening, that this scion of English nobility—I use the word "English" advisedly, for a glance at the genealogical tree of the Washington family will show you that the ancestors of the unconquerable George were Squires and Knights in the good old county of Lancashire, many generations before the American Revolution.

We have been told that, in his budding youth, George took upon himself the task of cutting down the tree which his father had planted. Well, what if he did. He confessed the fault like an honest little man, and was freely forgiven. History does not tell us that the devil, which lurks in the hearts of most boys, ever prompted him to choke up the well which his father digged, but even tho' he had done so, I think that we should forgive him just as readily when we remember that later on in life he opened up a well of independence and liberty which flows on and on for ever and ever.

In the year 1876 your humble servant was a youthful pilgrim at the shrine of Independence, and remembers with pleasure the many happy days he spent in a boyish endeavor to locate the scenes of strife which had taken place a hundred years before—how, at Trenton, I stood beside the peacefully flowing river and beheld in vivid imagery its shining waters transformed into a frozen pathway, over which crossed and recrossed that gallant little army of ragged, half-starved, half frozen heroes who had followed their beloved leader so faithfully and so devotedly during the whole of that bitter campaign.

As a Britisher, boy and man, I have never felt any grudge against the heroes of Bunker Hill, for a saintly mother taught me that the sword of Bunker Hill was the sword of God, the sword of Righteousness and justification. She also impressed upon my mind the fact that the English people of that day were not in sympathy with the iniquitous measures which drove a patient and a God fearing people into open rebellion against their King.

In 1774, Lord Chatham, on being told that the American colonists would resist the imposition of the Stamp Act, openly announced the fact that he was right glad to hear it. Later on, this noble Lord and statesman, in writing to his colleagues on this question, said, "I trust that there is not one free man in England today, who desires to see three millions of Englishmen made slaves in America."

That God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, is apparent in this, that he used the whims of a witless king as a means upon which to build the greatest and the grandest Republic which the world has ever known, or probably ever will know. That George the Third happened to be in his dotage at this particular time was, perhaps, no fault of his own. Poor fellow, he couldn't help it! Even kings are subject to this as well as you or I. But I am proud, very proud indeed, ladies and gentlemen, to realize that it was the same Anglo Saxon blood which flows in mine own veins today that nerved the arms of your Carvels and your Wynnes and your Washingtons in their glorious resistance of oppression and wrong.

But there are Britishers and Britishers, there are citizens and citizens. I have met with Britishers in this little territory of ours, whose breadth of mind compelled them to apply the term "renegade" in its lowest sense, to those of their countrymen who deemed it their duty to pay allegiance to the country of their adoption. And I have seen those same loud-tongued patriots exhibit an almost frantic zeal to forswear the mother country when they realized that failure to do so would mean the forfeiture of the pittance they received in Government fees in connection with an office which they held temporarily. If, to be a renegade, is to pay a due respect to the country that supports me and to take an active interest in the affairs of its people, why, I must confess that I do not dislike the title at all, and fully appreciate the wit and worth of those who use it in this connection.

Andrew Carnegie, a naturalized American citizen, and one of whom the United States has no cause to feel ashamed, on being accused of a lack of loyalty to the mother country said: "It disna follow, that because a man marries a wife that he will luv his mither any the less!" Well, I should hope not! A man should love his mother all the more when he has tasted fully the sweets which a true wife brings into the life of a true man. The naturalized citizen, with few exceptions, is a progressive citizen, who insists upon clean politics, and who is usually to be found casting his ballot in the interests of good government. With the scheming trickster, your self-centered, place-hunting politician, he is rarely to be found.

Personally, I am rather proud of the fact that the only place I ever hunted was a warm corner in the hearts of my fellowman and woman, especially the latter. And why not! Artemus Ward, an inimitable humorist once remarked, 'Had it not been for the existence of female women I should hardly have been here with my unparalleled show on the present occasion.' So it is with citizenship; were it not for the influence, the divine influence of the gentle sex we should have but few citizens, naturalized or otherwise, who would be of much account in the community. No man ever won his way to success, politically or otherwise without some assistance from Eve's lovely daughters, and a man may certainly covet the goodwill of a good woman without violating the commandments. You may think that I am drawing somewhat upon the imagination, but use your eyes as you walk the streets of Hilo and you will find that she is capable of lending a sense of dignity to apparent meaus. See that round shouldered individual walking down Waianuenue street, the picture of woe and desolation, the hat drawn down over his eyes, the eyes fixed upon the sidewalk. As his lagging feet carry him round the corner into Front street he suddenly finds himself in company with a dainty, bright-eyed, light-footed piece of femininity, and presto, he is "translated" as Bottom the weaver would say. His hat sits jauntily upon the back of his head, his chin goes high into the air, and with carriage erect and shoulders square he faces the ups and downs of Front street with a martial stride, to which the musical patter of her little feet become a running accompaniment. Before he met with this little magician his thoughts were probably centered on last night's carouse, or a game with a two-bit ante; but now his mind is filled with glowing visions of a cosey home, where in this little charmer is enthroned as queen; his heart beats loud within him as in fancy, he hears the trip, trip of childish feet, and feels a pair of loving little arms twining around his neck, and a voice of ineffable sweetness calling him "Daddy." God bless the woman, say I, to whom He hath given the power to lift us out of our baser selves, and make us men.

To those of my countrymen present with us this evening, who have not, as yet, taken upon themselves the obligations of citizenship, I would say that the question of citizenship is one that you alone must decide, and it is a question which you cannot decide in a spirit of levity or lightness. I know from experience what it is to feel the tugging and the straining of the heart strings when it comes to severing the ties that bind a man to his mother country and the home of his youth. The United States will never ask you to renounce your fealty to the mother land; but let me remind you of the fact that Great Britain today is engaged in an expensive warfare in South Africa on the grounds that the late leaders in that country had refused to grant to British subjects the rights of citizenship within a reasonable space of probation. I would say further, that if it be your intention to make the United States or its territories your future home; if you desire to marry, to dig wells and to plant trees, and, incidentally, to put more money into your pockets than you could reasonably hope to acquire in the land you have left; if you would be true men, honest in the sight of God, then it becomes your duty (and you know what the hero of Trafalgar said on that score, "England expects every man will do his duty"); it becomes your bounden duty to seek and to accept the honor which the United States confer upon all who pledge themselves to support the Constitution, and who keep faith as true and loyal citizens by virtue of naturalization.

Mr. Wheeler Got Rid of His Rheumatism.

"During the winter of 1898 I was so lame in my joints, in fact all over my body, that I could hardly hobble around, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. From the first application I began to get well, and was cured and have worked steadily all the year.—R. WHEELER, Northwood, N. Y., U. S. A. For sale by Hilo Drug Co.
